The Day The 'Earthquake' Hit Marin

By ERIK M. INGRAM

Marin County's first "live action" emergency-disaster drill — involving hundreds of local residents — was staged yesterday with mixed reports of its success in the field. (See other stories, pictures, page 28.)

The exercise was held to test the county's ability to provide emergency medical services in case of disaster — in this case a simulated earthquake with a magnitude of 6.0 on the Richter scale.

Frank Kirby, county coordinator of emergency services, said late yesterday that results on how effectively local medical personnel had responded would not be clear until Monday when observers fully assess the test.

However, preliminary assessments of the exercise indicated a need for more ambulance service and better communications — especially to West Marin.

Called exercise MOHAMED — meaning Marin Operational Area Health and Medical Emergency Services Division — the drill primarily was designed to test the response of local physicians, nurses, hospitals and ambulance companies to disaster. Local police and fire departments also were involved.

A total of 150 casualties, played by high school and College of Marin students, was reported in three locales: San Rafael High School, where 75 feigned injury; a West Marin bus crash hurting 25 and Hill Junior High School in Novato, where 50 simulated a variety of grotesque injuries.

The seriously injured were rushed by ambulance, truck and helicopter to Novato, Marin and Ross general hospitals and Kaiser Foundation Hospital.

Also involved were the county schools office and the school districts of Novato, San Rafael, Tamalpais and Shoreline.

Other jurisdictions participating were the cities of Belvedere, Fairfax, Larkspur, San Anselmo, Mill Valley, Novato, San Rafael, Sausalito and Tiburon.

As first word of the simulated earthquake and disasters reached Kirby's Emergency Operations Center at the Marin Civic Center, county health and medical officials began coordinating the two-hour exercise.

Dr. Theodore D. Hiatt, chief of county medical services, released four nine-man medical teams to the emergency scenes. They were made up of private physicians, dentists, nurses and veterinarians.

It was also his job to dispatch ambulances and coordinate delivery at hospitals, depending on the number they said they could handle.

After the initial report of the bus accident north of Point Reyes Station, communications were lost, setting that portion of the exercise back about a half hour, according to Kirby.

Meanwhile, reports trickled in from San Rafael High indicating some dead and 32 persons needed hospitalization.

It was not until 2:26 p.m., 26 minutes after the exercise started, that the first doctor arrived at the school. Minutes later a second doctor showed.

The first ambulance from San Rafael arrived at Marin General at 3:05 p.m., an hour after the earthquake supposedly brought part of the school cafeteria crashing down on students.

"One hour late, that's not too sharp," said Dr. Hiatt.

With no word coming from West Marin, Kirby released a preplanned helicopter from Hamilton Air Force Base to pick up five injured. Minutes later, West Marin requested the helicopter. It arrived at Marin General about an hour behind schedule.

The Novato portion of the exercise appeared to operate the most smoothly with 50 victims sorted, identified and treated or rushed to hospitals

Gray Reportedly Gave Nixon Warning

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray has told Senate attorneys he warned President Nixon last July that White House aides were interfering with the Watergate investigation, according to reports published today.

Nixon told a national television audience April 30 that, until two months ago, he was unaware of any "effort to conceal the facts."

The reports, published in three newspapers and aired by ABC, said Gray also told investigators for the Senate Watergate committee that exWhite House aide John Ehrlichman "inhibited" the FBI investigation less than two weeks after employes of the President's reelection committee were caught bugging Democratic headquarters last June 17.

The Senate committee, which begins public hearings next week, told U.S. District Court Friday it has evidence that unnamed White House aides "illegally and improperly removed and destroyed records and documents" pertaining to the Watergate investigation.

Gray's story, apparently taken from his three-hour conversation with committee investigators Thursday, was reported by the Baltimore Sun, the New York Daily News, the New York Times and ABC. On Friday, Gray talked with federal prosecutors.

The reports said Gray told of calling Nixon on the telephone July 6, and telling him about

JUST 'SAT DOWN'

Real Memories—The 1906 Temblor In San Francisco

By PATRICIA PERRY

While emergency helicopters landed at Marin General Hospital in the pretext of an earthquake, 96-year-old Peggy Finnegan sat in Room 232 of the hospital telling it like it really is in a California tremblor.

When the 1906 earthquake hit San Francisco, Mrs. Finnegan said she just "sat down and watched the old chair shake." Then she rushed to the backdoor of her home high on a San Francisco hill and watched fires break out.

Mrs. Finnegan, who now lives at the Nazareth House rest home in San Rafael, was a young mother of eight children when the earthquake struck.

Was she frightened?

"No, me darlin'," chuckled Mrs. Finnegan, who still has a strong Irish brogue, "why should I be? The chimney fell down, that's all."

Did her children scream?

"No, no. We watched the room shaking and went to the back door. Half of 18th Avenue down . . ."

PEGGY FINNEGAN
The real thing

Because their home was on a hill - she can't recall the street - the Finnegans took in the homeless.

"One hundred and fifty people we took in," said Mrs. Finnegan proudly. Her husband, James — "he was the best man ever to breathe the breath of life, me dear" — set up their dining room table in the basement and served coffee to the refugees.

"There was one woman with a new baby," remembered Mrs. Finnegan. "I spoiled that baby. I was good to her. She came in, poor soul, with nothing. She was old and she had a tiny baby . . . they went away after, never saw her again."

But if the Finnegans stayed calm, other San Franciscans didn't. "They were running around panicking like they were half naked," said Mrs. Finnegan scornfully, "while I

Brezhnev To Meet Nixon Next Month

Kissinger Says Summit To Be 'Working' One

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Soviet Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev will hold a summit conference with President Nixon during an official visit to the United States from June 18-26, the White House announced today.

Henry A. Kissinger, Nixon's top national security adviser and just back from a trip to Moscow, said the Brezhnev visit would be "an overwhelmingly working summit" aimed at a breakthrough in U.S.- Soviet arms control talks and completion of new agreements in agricultural research, oceanography, scientific and cultural exchanges.

Kissinger said that Brezhnev was expected to spend about 90 per cent of his time in Washington, but that he also would visit the West Coast, possibly the Western White House at San Clemente, Calif.

Kissinger said Brezhnev was expected to be accompanied by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and other senior aides.

President Nixon had invited Brezhnev and the other top Soviet leaders, President Nikolai V. Podgorny and Soviet Prime Minister Alexei N. Kosygin, to the United States during his summit meeting in Moscow a year ago.

Neither Kosygin nor Podgorny was expected to accompany Brezhnev. All three Soviet leaders rarely leave Moscow at the same time.

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler announced the Brezhnev trip in an official statement which was released simultaneously in Washington and Moscow. It said:

"At the invitation of President Nixon extended by him at Moscow in May, 1972 and in accordance with subsequent agreements, General Secretary Brezhnev will pay an official visit to the United States from June 18-June 26, 1973."

Pentagon Papers Case Tossed Out

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The judge in the Pentagon Papers trial, citing government misconduct, yesterday threw out all charges of espionage, conspiracy and theft against Daniel Ellsberg and Athony J. Russo.

The action came two weeks to the day after the startling link with the Watergate affair came to light.

In dismissing the charges and declaring a mistrial, U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne issued a strongly worded statement accusing the government of misconduct so serious it "offended a sense of justice" and "precluded a fair trial."

Byrne said he was dismissing the indictment so that the defendants could not be tried again on the charge because of "an extraordinary series of disclosures regarding the conduct of several government agencies."

The judge cited the revelations during the past two weeks of a White House-ordered burglary of Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office and a wiretap which overheard Ellsberg's telephone conversations and which was not revealed at any time during nearly two years of litigation.

There was pandemonium in the packed courtroom when Byrne made his ruling. Spectators leapt to their feet and gave Byrne a standing, cheering ovation. Ellsberg, 42, gave his weeping wife, Patricia, a kiss and embraced all of his attorneys.

Prosecutor David Nissen strode from the courtroom with a terse "No comment," but Assistant U.S. Attorney Warren Reese, asked by a newsman if the government would appeal the dismissal, replied, "No. This case is dead."

Ellsberg told newsmen on the steps of the courthouse that he planned to file a civil suit charging the government with bad faith prosecution and invasion of privacy. He said he hoped to force the government to reimburse him for the expense of defending himself, estimated at $1 million.

Ellsberg said there was enough evidence "to indict President Nixon for conspiring against Tony and me and the American people."

"These recent events compound the record already pervaded by incidents threatening the defendants' right to a speedy and fair trial," Byrne said.

Nixon Secluded At Retreat For Weekend

THURMONT, Md. (UPI) — President Nixon worked in seclusion at Camp David today, reportedly on a post-Watergate proposal to curb future campaign abuses by both parties.

The White House said officially that the President was "working on his papers" at his mountaintop retreat and that no top aides were with him.

One matter occupying his mind was creation of a bipartisan commission to avoid future Watergates, according to the Washington Evening Star-News.

Close associates of the President, the newspaper said, expect him to announce plans for the commission some time next week.

The proposed commission of 16 to 20 members would include senators and House members of both parties, appointed by congressional leaders, and Presidential appointees.

Acting White House counsel Leonard Garment has been working on the project, which Nixon forecast in his April 30 television speech when he urged political leaders and all Americans to curb "shady tactics" in future elections.

The bipartisan commission would be expected to look into a wide range of campaign reforms in all fields from vote fraud, bribery and other "dirty tricks," to the financing of campaigns and the adequacy of present campaign control laws.

Before he left for Camp David last night, Nixon signed into law a compromise rural electrification bill and asked Congress to approve proposals to provide lawyers for the poor.

The legislation extending the Rural Electrification Loan program was approved on the 38th anniversary of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's order establishing the Rural Electrification Administration (REA).

Roosevelt's New Deal program was intended to provide two per cent loans to bring electricity to farms and other isolated rural areas.

The new program continues the two per cent loans in isolated and economically depressed regions but increases the interest to five per cent in wealthier areas.

Nixon described the legislation as a "reasonable compromise."

The bill, he said, "focuses federal assistance and taxpayer dollars on those who truly need that assistance."

The legislation Nixon submitted to Congress on legal aid for the poor would give the White House the right to appoint members of the Legal Services Corporation's board of directors. A similar plan was rejected by Congress in 1971.

A Congress-approved version, vetoed by Nixon, would have required the President to appoint a majority of the directors from nominations submitted by various groups.

Red Commandos Attack Key Cambodian Position

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Cambodian Communist commandos today attacked government positions at the crossroads town of Tram Khnar, 24 miles south of Phnom Penh, and waves of American fighter-bombers were ordered into the fight.

Field reports said an estimated force of 400-500 Khmer Rouge (rebel) commandos attacked the outposts at the junction of Highways 2 and 3 at Tram Khnar and the battle had begun late Saturday morning. Field officers requested heavy U.S. air support, they said.

Other fighting including U.S. air support for Cambodian troops was reported north, west and south of the capital.

Field reports said government forces were within three miles of recapturing two positions overrun by Communist commandos late Friday, 15 miles west of Phnom Penh. The two outposts, at Wat Phnom and Thmat Pong, were in hilly terrain and evacuated by government troops "after courageously resisting the enemy," Cambodian spokesmen said.

Thailand-based U.S. F111s sent shock waves reverberating throughout the area as they dropped their 500-pound bombs on rebel positions.

Military sources reported that rebel troops also had surrounded Ang Taset, 16 miles north of Phnom Penh.

American jet warplanes flew strikes in the Ang Taset area, along the banks of the Mekong River 20 miles southeast of Phnom Penh where river convoys had come under heavy fire, in the area beside Highway 5 northwest of the capital and on Highway 7 in Kompong Cham province, 60 miles to the north.

U.S. OV10 "Bronco" armed reconnaissance planes also directed air strikes around Takeo, a threatened province capital 55 miles southwest of Phnom Penh on Highway 2, and Kampot, 93 miles southwest of the capital near the Gulf of Thailand.

American planes have been carrying out about 200 strikes a day over Cambodia during the course of the three-month rebel offensive.

Other Communist raids were reported along Highway 5 nothwest of the capital, military sources said.

Command spokesmen said Cambodian rebel gunners also shelled government positions about 7-½ miles south of Phnom Penh and at Salalek Pram, 32 miles northwest of the capital during the night.

A forward outpost near the 1,100-year-old ruins at Angkor Wat, 150 miles northwest of Phnom Penh, also came under harassing fire, the command said.

On the Cambodian political front, the ruling High Political Council Friday asked one of its four members, Assembly Speaker In Tam, to select a new Cambodian cabinet. In Tam said a few hours later that if he succeeded in forming the cabinet he expected to become prime minister.

The council's other members are President Lon Nol, Sisowath Sirik Matak and Cheng Heng. All four were instrumental in the March 18, 1970, ouster of former chief of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Connally Withdraws From Law Practice

WASHINGTON (UPI) — John B. Connally, newly appointed White House adviser, has taken a leave of absence from his Texas law firm, avoiding any link to a client under questioning for a $100,000 campaign contribution related to the Watergate scandal.

Connally announced his decision yesterday after it was disclosed that his firm represents Gulf Resources and Chemical Co., whose president, Robert H. Allen, made the contribution.

"I am today taking a leave of absence from my law firm for the period during which I will serve as a special adviser to the President," Connally said in a statement released in Houston. "I am also resigning from all corporate boards on which I serve."

Both Connally and the White House denied there was any conflict of interest involved. But Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said both Connally and President Nixon would take "great care" to avoid any conflict.

Allen appeared yesterday before a federal grand jury in Houston, which is investigating his $100,000 contribution to Nixon's re-election campaign. The money allegedly was routed through Mexico to the Miami bank account of Bernard Barker, a conspirator in the break-in last June 17 at the Watergate offices of the Democratic National Committee.

Newsday, the Long Island newspaper which uncovered Allen's link to the law firm, said the money was transferred from Gulf Resources' bank account to an account of the corporation's Mexican subsidiary, Compania de Azufro Veracruz.

Manuel Ogarrio Daguerra, attorney for the Mexican subsidiary, or his representative then converted $89,000 of the contribution into four checks — which eventually wound up in Barker's account, Newsday said.

The remaining $11,000 was converted into cash and sent back to Texas along with the $89,000 in checks, according to the newspaper.

"The funds were then combined," it said, "with an additional $600,000 in contributions and placed inside a suitcase." It added that Roy Winchester, vice president of Pennzoil United Inc., carried the suitcase to Washington just before April 7—when a new law went into effect requiring disclosure of all campaign contributions."

Popal Audience

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope Paul VI today received two top officials of the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government (PRG) in an audience the Vatican tried to keep as private as possible.

The Vatican confirmed the Pope would receive the two Viet Cong leaders only shortly before the audience was to take place.

Selassie Visit

LONDON (UPI) — Ethiopia's Emperor Haile Selassie arrived in London today for a brief private visit following talks in Cairo with Egypt's President Anwar Sadat. An aide said he will fly on to Washington Monday.

Selassie's London visit is completely private and "he will not be meeting anyone official or paying any calls during the weekend," the official said..

During a one-day stop in Cairo yesterday, the emperor met with Sadat to discuss international, Middle East and African matters, the Middle East News Agency said.

Visit To Poland

WARSAW (UPI) — With the last obstacle to his planned West German visit cleared, Soviet Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev ended a one-day visit to Poland today and flew to East Berlin.

Brezhnev's special red and white Ilyushin-62 jetliner—carrying Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and other Soviet officials—left Warsaw's Okecie Airport at 10:30 a.m. for East Berlin, where Brezhnev will continue his consultations with East European allies before his trip to West Germany.

Several hours after the Soviet leader arrived yesterday, the Bonn parliament approved a good neighbor treaty with East Germany, thereby opening the way for his trip to the West German capital beginning May 18.

To Paris Next

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger goes to Paris next week armed with two inducements to convince the North Vietnamese to respect the peace agreement—possible economic aid and resumption of offshore minesweeping.

Kissinger, accompanied by close aides, plans to leave for Paris by military jetliner early Wednesday for a three to four day meeting with North Vietnamese Politburo member Le Duc Tho.

The White House and North Vietnam announced simultaneously yesterday that the KissingerTho meeting had been scheduled for Thursday "to review the implementation of the Paris Agreement on ending the war and restoring the peace in Vietnam and to find measures to bring about the strict implementation of that agreement."

To Retain Control

BELGRADE (UPI) — President Tito will retain a firm hand in the Yugoslav Communist party despite a reduction of his official acitivites, party officials said today.

Communist party secretary Stane Dolanc told newsmen at the close of a party conference Friday that Tito could cut down on his official functions.

"It is only logical that in certain matters President Tito be freed from matters where his presence is not absolutely indispensable," the party secretary said.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State William P. Rogers flew to Mexico City today on the start of a 17-day mission to Latin America which may pave the way for a visit by President Nixon later this year.

Judge Halts Firing Of Cotati Official

SANTA ROSA — A Sonoma County Superior Court judge has temporarily halted the firing of the Cotati city manager because of a suit filed by a former city councilman.

Judge Lincoln F. Mahan signed a temporary restraining order against plans by three youthful members of the council to change an ordinance to permit the firing of City Mgr. Paul W. Salfen on a vote of 3-to-2 rather than the current 4-to-1. A hearing in the suit was set for May 21 at 9 a.m.

Alfred Falleti, one of the three incumbents ousted by the Sonoma State College graduates a year ago, charged that the council is overstepping its bounds by changing the vote requirement.

Falleti and other older Cotati residents started a recall action against Mayor Geoffrey Dunham and councilmen Annette Lombardi and Stephen Laughlin after the decision was made to change the ordinance and oust Salfen.

Falleti, through attorney Joseph Henderson, said he was instrumental in adoption of the original ordinance and contended it would do "irreparable harm" if the council could dismiss Salfen with only three votes. Older councilmen Herbert T. Winter and Frank P. Dolinsek have supported Salfen.

He said the present ordinance was intended to provide some semblance of security for the city manager.

"Specifically it was intended to prevent the disruption of the administrative affairs of the city", Falleti said in the suit.

The council had been expected to adopt the ordinance change next Thursday, but will not be able to do so until the injunction is lifted.

Falleti said he would seek to make the restraining order permanent at the May 21 hearing.

Tiburon To Discuss Open Space Plan

The Tiburon City Council, meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday at city hall, will discuss requiring developers to dedicate open space to the city at the time of building.

The council also will discuss the effect that the recent Marin Municipal Water District ban on new water connections will have on downtown development and consider a use permit for a 160-unit development on Vistazo West Street.

New Softball Facilities Under Way

Amid a shortage of softball facilities, the San Rafael Parks and Recreation Commission has been told that city engineers are working on two new diamonds at Albert Park.

The commission was told at Thursday's meeting that many teams wanting to compete in spring leagues were turned away because of the lack of facilities.

Commissioners, thinking part of the overcrowding problem could be due to participation by more city residents than allowed, asked for a report June 14.

In other matters, the commission said it would tour community parks and other facilities at 9 a.m. tomorrow, meeting first at city hall; delayed until completion of the city general plan consideration a park for the Peacock Gap area and recommended that nonresident fees for recreation programs be increased from $2 to $5 by the city council.

Larkspur Ferry Site Given Boost

The Golden Gate Bridge District board, endorsing a unanimous recommendation from its transportation committee, agreed yesterday to proceed with plans for the Larkspur ferry terminal on a site near the mouth of Corte Madera Creek.

The action, which came on a 12-3 vote, rejected pleas made previously by conservationists that planning for terminal design be halted until an alternative site on San Quentin lands is studied.

Director and San Rafael Mayor C. Paul Bettini said he believed that the state Department of Corrections has ruled out use of prison lands for ferry facilities. Director Michael Wornum, however, said he will ask Sen. Peter H. Behr, R-San Rafael, whether or not the San Quentin site is available.

Directors voted to proceed with plans after District engineer Robert E. Shields repeated a warning that the district will lose about $540,000 if planning is halted and the Corte Madera Creek site is ultimately found to be best anyway. Proceeding with engineering plans before an environmental impact report is drafted in October will cost about $250,000, according to Wornum.

David Miller, attorney for the district, noted, however, that the board "may have to back off from the Larkspur site," depending on the findings of the impact report.

The board told staff to proceed with the impact report, and said the report will include an analysis of alternative sites, including San Quentin.

Toll-Free Passage Is Suggested

The president of the Golden Gate Bridge District board proposed yesterday that cars carrying three or more passengers be given toll-free passage over the bridge for a 90-day trial period.

Board president Stephan C. Leonoudakis said he viewed the move as a method of combatting the fuel crisis and traffic congestion.

Colleagues, who appeared to favor the suggestion, suggested that the district study use of propane fuel and revive a study of free ferry passage for commuters.

Leounoudakis said he would refer his proposal — which would permit free car pool passage between the peak commute hours of 7 and 9 a.m., five days a week — to the district transportation committee.

In another move aimed at conserving fuel, Leonoudakis announced the formation of a district "fuel crisis committee", to be charged with studying domestic and foreign sources of fuel for the transit system.

Water Board Is Ordered To Answer Pipe Question

Marin Municipal Water District directors were ordered yesterday to appear before Superior Court Judge Henry J. Broderick May 30 to show cause why they should not approve extending a pipeline to the controversial Madera Del Presidio subdivision in the Meadowsweet area of Corte Madera.

The developers filed a petition in superior court to force the water district to supply the planned project, and declared that if it fails to do so, the district will face a claim for $2 million damages.

In the petition, Cal West Communities Inc.; Harter-Odenthal Investment Co. and Composite Structures Inc. recite a long history of attempts to gain water from the district, beginning with an application last July 17.

The application failed by a 2-2 vote last Sept. 13, the petition declares, because district Director Eugene A. Miller abstained from voting on grounds of possible conflict of interest. His engineering firm was working on some phases of the project.

Directors Jack R. Felson and Ronald T. Stafford voted against the application, as they did when the application was brought up again March 14. Again the application lost by a 2-2 vote, but Miller meanwhile had resigned and his seat was vacant.

Felson and Stafford contended the district lacked water to serve the subdivision, the court action charges, but district directors approved other projects needing even more water between last July and Nov. 21.

Quentin '6' Reappear In Court

The so-called San Quentin Six made their first appearance in a Marin court in nearly a year yesterday, although one of the inmates spent much of the afternoon in a holding cell hammering on the wall.

The other five men accused of murder in the bloody uprising Aug. 21, 1971, at the San Quentin Prison adjustment center sat quietly as Superior Court Judge Henry J. Broderick heard and took under submission a series of motions — mostly aimed at letting defense attorneys remove themselves from the case.

Broderick said he would decide on those questions Monday.

The actual trial of the six convicts came no closer as a result of the day-long court proceeding.

The men have been indicted by the Marin County Grand Jury on charges or murder and conspiracy for the alleged escape attempt in which three prison guards and three convicts, including Soledad Brother George Jackson, died. Also indicted, but vanished since the day of the killings was Jackson's attorney, Stephen M. Bingham, accused of smuggling in a gun used in the breakout attempt.

About 45 spectators sat for the most part quietly through morning and afternoon sessions. Spectators periodically complained of being unable to hear the proceedings through thick glass dividing the audience section from the bench area, and Brokderick several times ordered microphones relocated.

Spain refused to reenter the room in the afternoon session and was placed in an adjoining holding cell. Midway through proceedings, he began lustily kicking the cell walls. The noise reverberated throughout the Hall of Justice like a huge drum.

Spain complained that San Quentin guards had not obeyed a doctor's orders about padding his wrists before shackling him.

Today is Saturday, May 12, the 132nd day of 1973 with 233 to follow.

The moon is approaching its full phase. The morning stars are Mercury, Mars and Jupiter. The evening stars are Venus and Saturn.

Florence Nightingale, the British nurse who founded modern nursing, was born May 12, 1820.

On this day in history:

In 1949, Soviet authorities announced the end of a land blockade of Berlin that had lasted 328 days and whose effects had been neutralized by the famed "Berlin Airlift."

In 1963, President John Kennedy ordered federal troops into Birmingham, Ala., after an outbreak of civil rights rioting.

A thought for the day: Scottish essayist Thomas Carlyle said, "Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man. But for one man who can stand prosperity, there are a hundred who will stand adversity."

ernment conduct has been shielded so long from public view," the judge said.

"The totality of the circumstances of this case offend 'a sense of justice.' The bizarre events have incurably infected the prosecution of this case."

Byrne said it was the conduct of the government "which has placed the case in such a posture that it precludes a fair and dispassionate resolution of these issues by a jury."

The defense expressed elation that the judge based the dismissal on "the totality of government misconduct" rather than the narrower issue of wiretap, which he had appeared to indicate on Thursday would be the basis of a dismissal.

The end came 3 ½ years after Ellsberg, an economist who spent the decade of the 1960s as a government consultant on national security, decided to copy the secret Vietnam War study and turn it over to Congress.

He enlisted the aid of Russo, a colleague at the Rand Corp. in Santa Monica, to make copies at a Los Angeles advertising agency at night.

The documents appeared in The New York Times on June 13, 1971, and although Ellsberg admits leaking them to the news media, the government charged him only with espionage, conspiracy and theft in connection with the copying.

The trial was five months old and was at the point of closing arguments when a series of bombshells burst on April 27.

by 3:15 p.m. By 3:20 p.m., the Novato operation was ended.

Meantime, Kirby's operations center was told Marin General still was waiting for more victims. By 3:30 p.m., an hour and a half after MOHAMED started, the hospital reported eight patients and capacity for about 20 more.

At the 4 p.m. end of the exercise, San Rafael High School reported its victims had been cleared to hospitals. It was never certain when victims of the West Marin accident were finally removed.

"The point of the exercise was to determine where we are weak and where we are strong," Kirby said after it was over. Monday's critique will help provide the answers, he added.

Yesterday's drill was the second of eight disaster exercises planned during the next four years. The first was conducted in December, but was primarily a "paper drill" without actual reenactment throughout the county.

The next, possibly simulating disasters to roads and bridges, is planned for the fall. It will test how city and county public works officials and crews respond to disaster, Kirby said.

White House interference. According to the Sun, Gray said he told the President that he was concerned the FBI and the CIA were being "used" by people close to the White House in the Watergate probe.

The Daily News quoted Gray as saying, "Mr. President, I want to warn you that people around you are wounding you."

The Daily News said he replied: "Well, Pat, you continue pressing the investigation as hard as you can." The Watergate break-in was not mentioned in the conversation, the News said.

Nixon had "no reaction," according to the Sun.

When Ehrlichman and White House Chief of Staff H.R. Haldeman resigned April 30, Nixon said in his televised speech that until last March he had received "continuing assurances" that members of his staff were not involved in political espionage in "any way."

"However," he added, "new information then came to me which persuaded me that there was a real possibility that some of these charges were true and suggesting further there had been an effort to conceal the facts ..."

Gray said the incident with Ehrlichman occurred about 10 or 11 days after the Watergate break-in, according to the reports. Gray tried to set up an appointment with CIA director Richard M. Helms, they said, but it was canceled by Ehrlichman. He reportedly wanted to talk to Helms about CIA involvement in the growing scandal.

Gray resigned amid reports that he had burned White House documents described as "political dynamite."

The Times and Daily News said Gray told the Senate investigators he burned the documents allegedly taken from a safe in Hunt's White House office at his home in Connecticut about six months after they were given to him by former White House counsel John Dean in Ehrlichman's office June 28.

Previously, Gray has said publicly that he had the documents destroyed in his FBI office a few days after he got them.

Hunt has said he forged the documents so they would appear to be State Department cables implicating President Kennedy in the 1963 assassination of South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh Diem.

Dean, who headed the original White House probe into the Watergate affair and was fired by Nixon, has asked U.S. District Court to assume responsibility for other White House documents he has hidden in a safe deposit box in Virginia.

The Senate committee asked the court for access to that safe deposit box. Judge John J. Sirica has scheduled a hearing Monday on the matter.

The committee said it believes the documents relate to "illegal, improper or unethical activity" during the 1972 presidential campaign.

The refugees stayed in the Finnegan's house for several days. It was a noisy time, said Mrs. Finnegan. Today, she can't remember too many details of the disaster and says she tires easily. She was in Marin General for a throat operation at the time of yesterday's interview.

But she does recall refugees sleeping on the floor of their home with blankets and water being brought in. The gas pipes supplying her house didn't rupture and there were no fires nearby.

She remembers, however, with vivid clarity — and swears she'll never forget — a doctor and his wife who were given the Finnegan's best bedroom to stay in.

"Our best room," she grumbled, "a lovely clean room all to themselves. Three months they stayed and off they went. I never got five cents, though they promised to pay. I've seen her since, oh, yes, but never a mention of paying . . . the scalywags."

What advice would she give to present-day Californians enduring an equally devastating earthquake?

"Stay still. Don't run here and run there. Stay inside your house. Fire won't bother you. Keep easy."

DANCE REVIEW

Little Enthusiasm By Students

By SHIRLEY LIPTON

The audience that half filled Warren Auditorium Thursday night was not particularly enthusiastic about the Sonoma State College Dance Workshop concert they saw, but then, with few exceptions, the dancers didn't show much enthusiasm either.

Apparently, most of the students, who did their own choreography, felt they must be very serious and terribly significant. They seemed to forget there is an audience out there expecting to be entertained.

In the program of 10 dances, there was only one humorous piece and it received considerable applause and even a few scattered "bravos." This selection was called "Sally and Me" and featured Kenn Stewart in a combination ventriloquist routine and dance with a blonde female dummy.

He did several types of dances including a fox trot, Charleston and a very funny tango. In the latter, the dummy's arms snaked around his shoulders and she kissed him passionately on the neck. For a brief moment everyone believed she was real.

There were three dancers: one male in a clingy white jumpsuit, two women dressed in white leotards with black sequined jackets and crocheted helmets. They began with slow, very stylized movements which eventually drifted into a fast and loose dance to a wild rock beat.

For most of the dance selections, the stage was bare. But in the dance called "Secret," long strips of rice paper were hung from the top of the stage. A voice off-stage read this haiku:

"The first dream of the new year,

I smiled and kept it a secret to myself."

The first dancer entered dressed in a Japanese short kimono, she took a large brush and began writing on the paper. A second dancer, dressed in black leotards appeared from behind the paper and started dancing. She imitated all the movements of the brush with her body. Finally, both artist and her secret self danced together.

A more familiar kind of music appeared in "The Little Fugue" by Bach. This was a deceptively simple dance done in exact time to the mathematical precision of Bach, contrapuntal.

The rest of the program can be dismissed fairly easily. By trying to be symbolic, the dancers merely confused the audience. "In search of a Center," for instance, didn't seem to have a center worth searching for. Two girls displayed a few acrobatic kicks and the ability to lean backwards gracefully, but not much else.

By far the worst selection, however, was a dance called "SAE 30-Weight Non-Detergent." No music played as three large oil drums rolled out on stage. Five girls in black leotards mounted the barrels and moved them around. Occasionally, they tapped a foot or rolled over backwards, but very little dancing was done.

Costuming for the workshop was kept at a minimum. Most of the dancers simply wore leotards and tights in various colors. Stage decorations consisted of the rice paper used in the Japanese piece and three light fixtures used in the finale, but none of this would have mattered if the dance program itself was exciting.

I would ask the workshop directors to remember that when they charge admission and invite the public, their first obligation is to provide entertainment. Students of modern dance should learn the difference between lack of plot or story and lack of purpose. They may think the dance is meaningful and deep, but too often the audience is left confused and bored.

Check Charge Hearing Set

Ronald Alfred Wold, 40, of no fixed address, will have a preliminary hearing May 22 on a charge of issuing 10 fictitious checks in San Rafael stores in January.

He pleaded innocent to the charge yesterday before Marin Municipal Court Judge Gary W. Thomas.

Wold was arrested in Inyo County on a fugitive warrant charging the bad checks and parole violation, and was returned to Marin County Jail Wednesday by San Rafael police.

College's Nursing Program Faces Enrollment Cutback

Unless the College of Marin nursing program receives two new instructors, new student enrollment may have to be slashed and an "unrealistic" and "dangerous" instructor-student ratio will continue.

That's the substance of a complaint lodged to college officials by students and teachers in the program, long recognized as one of the state's best.

The program now admits 55 new students each year, but that may drop to 40 in the fall unless two new instructors are added, according to department officials. The reason is that the instructor-student ratio of 1-15 is too high, they say.

A petition signed by 83 nursing students is to be presented Wednesday to the Marin Community College District board expressing concern over the ratio as "unrealistic, dangerous to patients' safety" and harmful to classroom learning.

Lyla Cromer, head of the nursing department, said the state board of Nurse Examiners and Nurse Registration recommends a ratio of one instructor to every 10 students. The College of Marin has six instructors, with Mrs. Cromer teaching part of the time. There are nearly 100 students.

The present ratio is potentially dangerous, said Mrs. Cromer, because students spend much of their time in clinical situations, working at Marin General and Ross General hospitals, and in doctors' offices, psychiatric clinics and public health facilities.

"We get situations where all fifteen students are in different units in a hospital with only one instructor to supervise them. . . there might be two in an intensive care unit, one in a coronary care unit, others in pediatrics, and the emergency room. . . it means the instructor has to run fast, to say the least."

Prospects of hiring two more instructors and thus insuring enrollment of 55 new students in the fall are unclear at the moment. John A. Grasham, district superintendent, said the department's request is being considered "under the budgetary process" and he hasn't decided yet whether he'll recommend the extra positions.

"We make our five-year budget projections on certain assumptions," Grasham said. "And one of these assumptions is that there will be no more faculty hired for College of Marin."

He said the nursing program is a very expensive department to run, with higher per student costs than other departments.

Kansas Girl Is Junior Miss Winner

Miss Rutledge, 18, daughter of a Marine Corps pilot, was selected for the title Friday over high school seniors from the other 49 states.

"I can't believe it," Miss Rutledge said. "It's such a wonderful thing. I'm looking forward to promoting the pageant because I think it's the greatest thing a girl can get into."

Susan Alison Murphy, 17, of Kailua, Hawaii, was named first runnerup. Karen Heidcamp, 17, of Park Ridge, Ill., was chosen second runnerup.

Laura Johnson, 17, of Sturgis, S. D., was third runnerup and Rebecca Jones, 18, of Boise, Idaho, was fourth runnerup.

Miss Rutledge won a $10,000 college scholarship which she said she will use to attend Pennsylvania State University. She said she hopes to work with computers for the National Space and Aeronautics Administration.

The 5-foot-2 winner, who has blonde hair and green eyes, is the daughter of Marine Lt. Col. Gary L. Rutledge, a veteran of the Indochina War.

Construction Of Pond Approved

The Las Gallinas Valley Sanitary District board last night approved construction of a pond at its sewage treatment plant on Smith Ranch Road that would increase the plant's flow capacity 60,000 gallons a day.

If approved by the Regional Water Quality Control board, construction would begin on the $35,000 project in August and be completed in September, according to Edward Tibbetts, district engineer.

The board also agreed to spend $1,000 for a consulting attorney's opinion on the district's legal responsibilities to provide new sewer hookups, Tibbetts said.

Jury Finds Pair Guilty In Theft

A Marin Superior Court jury convicted two Marin City men of concealing stolen property yesterday after a two-week trial arising from the Jan. 9 theft of a safe containing thousands of dollars from a Mill Valley home.

Judge Henry J. Broderick set sentencing for May 21 for Kenny Ray White, 21, and Claude Burton, 28. White also had been charged with burglary, but the jury cleared him on the charge.

A third man in the case is scheduled for sentencing tomorrow, because he pleaded guilty to a reduced misdemeanor count of concealing stolen property. Judge Broderick accepted the plea from Billy Maurice Thomas, 38, also of Marin City, and promised him no more than 60 days in jail as a result of plea bargaining.

During the long trial of White and Burton, Leonard Lew of 32 Underhill Road, Mill Valley, testified that the safe stolen from his home contained $9,000 in large bills and costly jewelry. Stereo equipment also was stolen from the home.

Sheriff's deputies discovered that the safe was being cut open with an aceylene torch in an apartment at 223 Drake Avenue, Marin City, but the thieves fled and were arrested later when two men began trying to cash $1,000 bills in a nearby restaurant.

HOW TO PLAY WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

The Extra 50 Points Are Not Significant — Don't Take Risk

When you're not doubled and particularly when you're not vulnerable, there's not much difference between a one-trick and a two-trick defeat. You can afford to risk going down one additional trick if your line of play will improve your chance to make the contract.

Opening lead — ♣ Q

SEES DANGER

West opened the queen of clubs and South had no trouble in seeing the danger: He might easily lose a trick in each suit.

All would be well if East had the king of hearts. The normal finesse would work whenever South tried it. South was on the point of trying a finesse with the queen of hearts when he saw an extra chance.

Declarer simply led a low heart from dummy and finessed with the nine from his own hand. The important thing about this play was that it might work but couldn't lose anything material even if it failed.

WEST TAKES TRICK

As it happened, West had to win the trick with the king of hearts. He returned another club, forcing out the remaining top card in that suit. South thereupon took the ace and queen of hearts, discarding the losing club from dummy.

Only then could South afford to lead a trump. The game contract was then safe.

If South had led trumps earlier, West would have developed a club trick. Then South would surely lose one trick in each suit.

HEART FINESSE

Now let's look at the deep finesse in hearts. If this finesse loses to the ten or jack, declarer will get back to dummy with a club in time to finesse with the queen of hearts. If the second finesse wins, South will discard dummy's club loser on the ace of hearts.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner deals and bids one diamond and the next player doubles.

You hold:
♠- J 7 4 3 2
♥- 5 2
♦- Q 8 4
♣- A K 5.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Redouble, planning to bid spades at your next opportunity.

If partner cannot raise spades, you will show your diamond support. The redouble promises about 10 points in high cards or strong support for partner.

Ansel Adams Show At Dominican College

Photographs by Ansel Adams are being exhibited from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on weekdays through July 1 in the library at Dominican College of San Rafael.

Eight Dominican campus scenes are included among the photographs made between the years 1938 through 1955. The exhibit represents a small part of the collection presented to Dominican College by Ansel Adams, who was closely associated with the college during his early years in photography.

BIRTHDAY QUIZ

By GORDON B. GREB

True or False? Let's set the record straight on today's birthday greats.

1. HOWARD K. SMITH is 59 today. A graduate of Tulane University, he attended Oxford on a scholarship, then became a news correspondent in Europe up to World War II, leaving Germany on the last train. Is it true he left CBS in 1961, joining the ABC network, because of a program he did that allowed Alger Hiss to criticize and evaluate the work of Richard M. Nixon?

2. YOGI BERRA is 48 today. Made fun of when he was young, he surprised everybody after leaving his hometown of St. Louis, Mo., becoming the greatest catcher in the history of the New York "Yankees." Would you believe he holds more World Series records than any player in history — most Series played, most games, most hits, most singles, most doubles, most total bases, and most runs batted in?

3. MILDRED H. McALFEE, 73 today, was named the first director of the WAVES by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in World War II. Before the war was over, she commanded 78,000 enlisted women and more than 8,000 female officers. Is it true this outfit was called "Women Accepted for Voluntary Emergency Service"?

4. FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE shocked her parents and London society by choosing to become a nurse at age 19, and occupation considered unworthy of fine women. Yet she single-handedly brought status to this profession by her service in war. Is it true she was killed at age 27 in the Crimean conflict?

ANSWERS: 1 - True; 2 - Ture; 3 - True; 4 - False.

ART REVIEW

Magical Patterns Displayed

By ADA GARFINKEL

Luis Cervantes's eye-dazzling and mind-boggling paintings can do anything he wants them to do.

In a three-artist exhibit of San Francisco's LaRaza painters at the College of Marin's Student Center, Cervantes's geometric and visionary paintings form and reform themselves — now advancing, now receding and bending and reshaping their format.

Cervantes is fully aware of all the illusionary variables inherent in the op-art technique and in the optical effects of fluorescent colors, and uses them both.

In one large painting entitled "What the Deep Eye Sees," for example, small diamond shapes diminish in size and become diffused in color as they move toward the four peripheral edges, creating an illusion of a bulging, three-dimensional, sculptural form.

And on a similarly shaped format, fluorescent pink, turquoise, and canary yellow combinations bounce and scintillate in "A Gift to the Darkness."

However, it is in the rainbow-colored visionary painting entitled "Where the Last Buffalo Roam" that Cervantes reaches tour-de-force stature.

Carlos Lorca, a native of Guatemala, is the most traditional of the three artists in the LaRaza Spring Cultural Festival show.

The third in the trio is Peter Rodriguez whose freely brushed, linear paintings are as fresh as spring rain.

Their spontaneity and linear energy derive from the action painting of abstract expressionism, while the lozenge shapes and overlapping circles in "Place Where Gods Go to Sing" recall the works of Kandinsky.

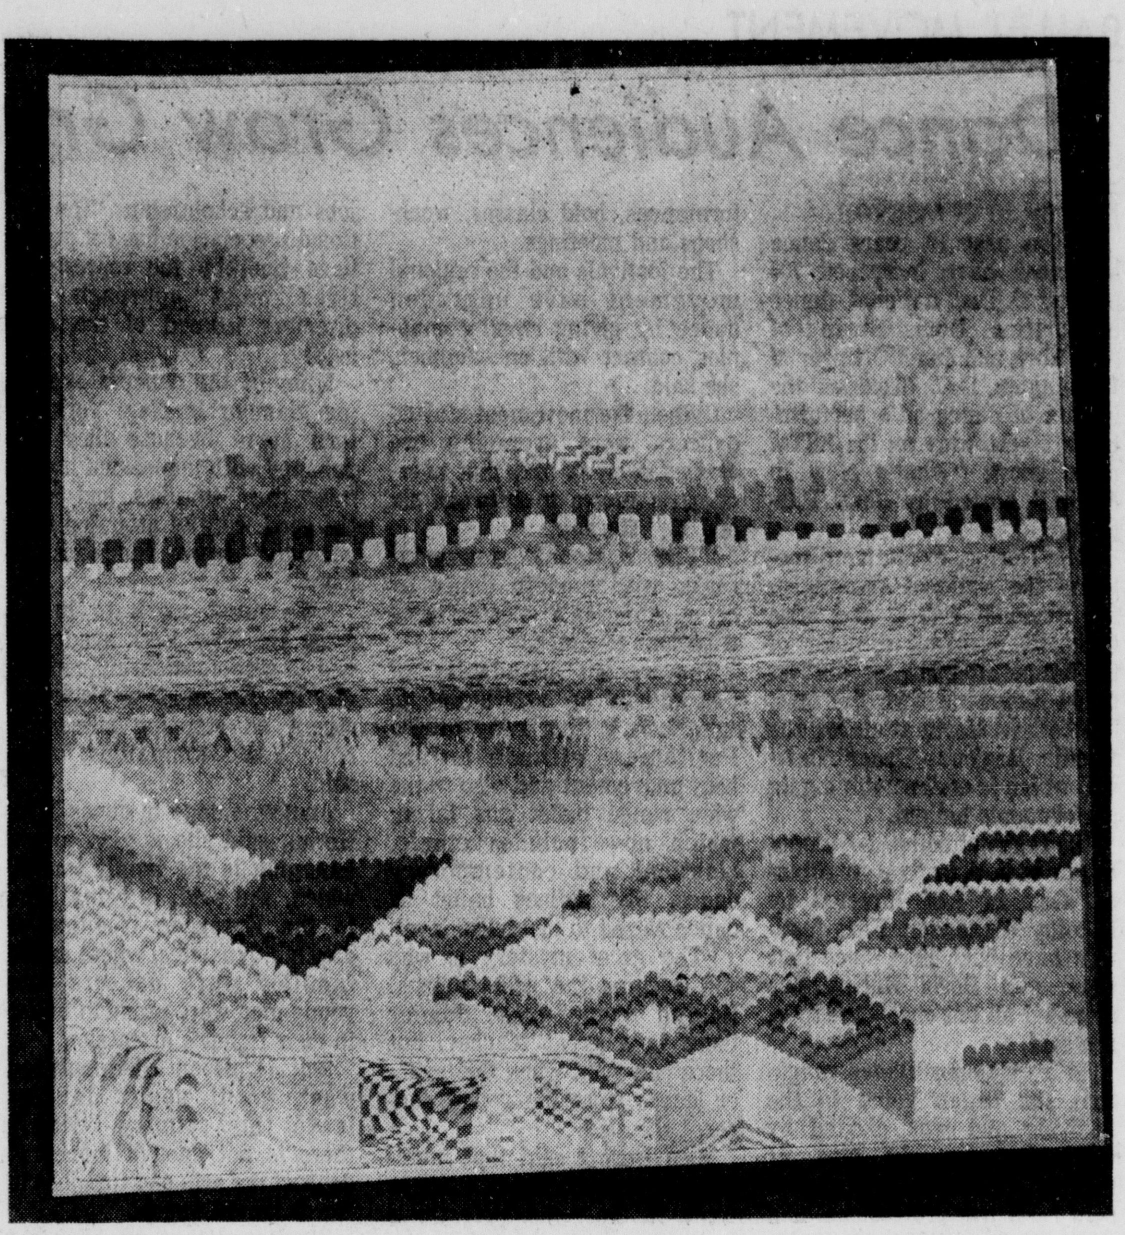
In these works, much of the canvas remains pristine white, while the sensitivity of his brush creates quick, caligraphic notes in both graded black and ochre washes and full-bodied applications, which transform into magic flower gardens with unobtrusive pop imagery.

This exhibit which has been arranged by Chicano students at College of Marin, will continue through May 18, and may be seen weekdays from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m.



LARAZA PAINTINGS — Rainbow-colored rows of grazing land and op-art feed stalls are seen in Luis Cervantes's visionary painting entitled, "Where the Last Buffalo Roam." It is included in the LaRaza Spring Cultural Festival Exhibit in the College of Marin's Student Center.

Chorus Scores The Biggest Hit In Novato's Big Musical

By KAY KSANDA

They always have a lot of fun up in Novato when their Community Players persent their annual musical show. This year it was no exception. The chorus again walked off with the outstanding performance.

"Kiss Me Kate," the Cole Porter musical version of Shakespeare's "Taming of The Shrew," opened last weekend to a cheering crowd, and will have its final performance tonight at 8:30 o'clock at the Novato Community House.

The show last night got off to a slow and jerky start with a milling scene onstage that went on too long, and really didn't kick up to that grand old tune, "Another Opening, Another Show."

The whole first act was weak, lines were thrown everywhere except to the audience, and it was hit and miss with the act's meaning. The problem was immediately evident: the two major characters had voice difficulties.

Although Jack Mitchell as Petruchio had a sweet baritone, much of his crutial dialogue was lost, particularly the punch lines which dropped out of range to all but the first few rows. They were indistinct. He moved easily through the character as if Pertuchio were a diletante instead of one of the stage's most lusty male figures.

Lei Mann as Kate had a clear speaking voice, fine presence, and good projection, but poor breathing for her music. As a romantic couple they worked well together, but for the story line, I couldn't believe she would pick him over her millionaire boy friend. Bob Marchant's resemblence to Henry Kissinger (as the boy friend) sparked and updated the show.

Sally McGillis has probably one of the best voices and delivery around for the part of Bianca, and she performed with ease, even with the handicap of a "dog collar" brace around her neck — made necessary by a recent whiplash injury. With a little lace the costumer had changed this into a 16th Century Ruff.

Adding to her song and dance was Dick Buell as Bill Calhoun, or Lucentio. He had flair, timing, good voice, and personality. Together, both he and Miss McGillis didn't seem to have enough material to show what they could really do.

It was the opening of the second act that finally jelled the show and made the pace. It was done by the combined sock power of the chorus and dancers weaving in and out in beautiful costumes and full voice in an intricate, exhilarating folk dance. It was a show stopper.

My acting award goes to a minor part, a gangster, played by Alex Consagra. Although he had little to say in his first scene, he was frugal in his gestures, clear in his speech, and in to his character every moment. When he was onstage I couldn't take my eyes off of him.

Both the set and the costuming were excellent for a local performance. Choreography and music by David Block was superior. The accompaniment was a pianist, 16-year-old Patrick Terry, and drummer Bob Anderson.

Free Spring Concert Set Next Week

The College of Marin's collegiate chorale, community orchestra and college chorus will present a free spring concert on May 19 at 8:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Theater.

The orchestra and chorale will perform Leonard Bernstein's "Chichester Psalms." Using strings, brass, harp and percussion, the performance will be conducted by John H. Myers, director of the community orchestra. Soloists will be soprano Terry Buckley, alto Janet Rue, tenor Nicholas Reid, bass Horace Hill and John Eastman, boy alto.

The collegiate chorale, directed by Scott Merrick, will sing "A German Requiem" by Heinrich Schutz, and, directed by William Amatneek, Randall Thompson's "Allelulia."

Dr. Stanley Craczek will conduct the college chorus in several short works, including one using a tape of synthesized music.

The two choruses will combine for "Gloria in Excelsis" by Mozart and Handel's "Allelujah, Amen." Soloists in the latter work will be Elaine Messer, Janet Rue, Nicholas Reid and Louis Weiner.

Theme Sought For Festival

The Mill Valley Fall Arts Festival, a Southern Marin tradition for 17 years, is seeking a poster and theme for its 18th show set for Sept. 29 and 30 at Boyle Park in Mill Valley.

Festival president Tora D. Garaventa, said persons interested in entering a poster in the contest should bring a sample to the festival committee's next meeting at 8 p.m. June 6 at Mill Valley City Hall.

Festival members, meeting Thursday, also named members to seven committees to plan the annual event, Mrs. Garaventa said.

'The Hostage' Is Well Worth Revisit At College Of Marin

By PATRICIA PERRY

It's been only 16 years since Brendan Behan wrote "The Hostage," yet already it has become a period piece, offering a collection of comic Irish patriots in a "despicable rooming house" in Dublin, chatting and singing about the bloody British and remembering the Easter Rebellion and DeValera.

It's a period piece, indeed, that has no relevance to today's desperate street warfare in Belfast, with a generation of children who know nothing but bombs and murder and hate.

And, as presented last night by the College of Marin Department of Theater Arts, it's a period that's well worth revisiting.

This production has all the pace, all the vigor, all the sheer professionalism that's a hallmark of the group's productions. Theater III, the old Festival Theater, is a smashing setting for the music-hall style play, and it's easy to understand why the players love the old rustic theater.

Dakin Matthews, the company's only professional, earns every penny as Pat, the one-time Irish Republican Army zealot who belatedly realized the futility of blind patriotism. His carefully controlled cynicism, heightened as he became drunker and drunker, was clever and artful.

His cynicism was matched by Barbara Jeppesen, his maybe wife. She remained skeptical and irascible — a feat of timing since all about her were going balmy.

In a cast of nutty characters, each of whom delighted a capacity first-night audience, it's possible to single out only a few.

John McDillis was first class as Monsewer, the mad expatriate Englishman who is an unofficial IRA general. Each time he emerges from the bathroom, upper lip stiff, bagpipes at the ready, it's as if every eccentric Briton who ever lived is marching the stage, toes turned up.

Kendell Jackson as Teresa, innocent yet knowing, was a perfect foil for the imprisoned British Army private, played by Jeffrey Josephson. His cockney accent — to a demanding British ear — was bloody good, a fine performance by a newcomer to the department.

Abby Goldman plays Miss Gilchrist with verve and bounce.

William C. Walsh as Princess Grace was just as gay as gay could be, backed up by a shimmering David Silverman as Rio Rita — an improbable pair who became even gayer when a splendidly seedy Robin Williams, as Mr. Mulleady, joined them in one of the best songs in the show.

All the singing, in fact, is done with great gusto, aided by a quartet of implacable tarts who are the musicians. The four girls, Karen MacDonald, Cathy Hudnall, Cricket Waldeck, and Robin Willat, don't say much, if anything, but they play superbly.

The show is highly recommended. There's only one reservation. It seemed a great pity that the producers saw fit to bring the play "up to date" by inserting references to Henry Kissinger and Raquel Welch and Leonid Breshnev since it is a play about the Irish in the 1950's.

It isn't about the Ireland of 1973. That's an entirely different — and not half so funny — kettle of fish. Each false reference jars the audience.

"The Hostage" will be presented again tonight and on May 17, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 26 and 27 at 8 p.m. in Theater III on the grounds of the San Francisco Theological Seminary in San Anselmo.

New Sudanese Cabinet Seated

CAIRO (UPI) — The new Sudanese cabinet was sworn in today by President Jaafar Numeiry, the Middle East News Agency said.

In a dispatch from Khartoum, the agency said a number of new governors were also sworn in by the Sudanese leader.

The new cabinet headed by Numeiry was announced in Khartoum Thursday, the agency said.

Ibsen — Big Winner At Film Event

CANNES, France (UPI) — Joseph Losey's "A Doll's House", adapted from the Henrik Ibsen play of the same name was the favorite of patrons of the 26th annual Cannes Film Festival yesterday — the first full day of screenings.

The festival was featuring films by Italian director Mario Monicelli and American James William Geurcio today.

The Guercio film was to be "Electra Glide in Blue" and the Monicelli film is "Nous Voulons des Colonels" ("We want the Colonels.").

"In spite of the difficult dialogue of Ibsen and the movie being rather long, it is a very, very good film," one person said of "A Doll's House."

Persons who watched all the films presented yesterday missed a gray and rain soaked day in this French Riviera city. They entered the theater in the morning and emerged again for dinner as clouds faded and a clear night broke.

Plea Made To Theft From Safe

Gary Richard Westover, 19, of Sacramento, pleaded innocent yesterday to a charge of stealing $2,259 from the safe of a Strawberry area drive-in restaurant where he was assistant manager.

Municipal Court Judge Gary W. Thomas ordered a preliminary hearing on the charge on Tuesday, when preliminary hearings for two others arrested in the case, James H. Krainik, 20, and Michael John Connolly, 20, both of San Rafael, also will be held.

Westover was on duty at the MacDonald's restaurant just before the late night theft Feb. 6, and Krainick had quit as a maintenance man for the restaurant just before the burglary, sheriff's deputies reported.

Krainik and Connolly previously pleaded innocent.

BALLET MOVEMENT

Dance Audiences Grow Greatly

By JOAN LISETOR

In the past 10 years dance audiences have increased 700 per cent. Two national dance authorities, Doris Hering of New York and Janet Ottinger of Washington, D.C., discussed the impact of dance as a performing art yesterday on the KTIM radio show, "What's New In Marin," hosted by Jean Fitzgerald.

Miss Hering, executive director of the National Association for Regional Ballet, and Miss Ottinger, assistant director of the dance program for the National Endowment for the Arts, are both in Marin attending the Pacific Regional Dance Festival, which is ending with a gala performance tonight.

The regional ballet movement began with a festival in Atlanta, Ga., in 1956 directed by Dorothy Alexander. Fifty festivals have been held since that time, and Doris Hering has attended all but one — the first, she said.

As a critic for Dance magazine she began going to the festivals and was excited by what she saw, she said. At regional festivals young dancers from non professional and semi professional companies within the regional give performances, hold classes, workshops and meetings.

The festivals and the regional movement have upgraded dance by giving small companies contact with one another, she said.

"When the movement started dancers were averaging two classes a week and that average has grown to between six and 12," she said.

"The regional movement ranks with modern dance as being America's greatest contributions to dance."

The recent popularity of dance can be attributed to America's getting away from a Puritanical attitude toward body movement and also to the wide range ballet has taken, which now includes ethnic, classical and contemporary dance. She defines ballet as dance raised to theatrical level.

"The great mystery is who will become the great artists. Behind every great dancer there is a great teacher, but there is a point when the teacher learns from the young dancer," she said.

Miss Hering said that members of professional companies come to the regional festivals and snap up the good dancers, especially males with offers of jobs and scholarships. The national association has set guidelines whereby the representatives must approach the directors instead of the dancers.

Many of the dancers expecting glamour in New York return home because they are unhappy with unpleasant living, miss their families and miss the good, careful attention they received from teachers at home.

"We must work to break down the New York syndrome and to stop considering companies like Boston, New York and others as stepping stones to New York companies," she said.

Another image in dance Miss Hering said she is glad to see emerging is the family image, which, she said, is going back to the European tradition of dancing dynasties, where entire families were dancers and young men were proud to follow in their father's profession.

She is often disappointed when good, young dancers leave this country because there is not enough money to support the arts and find jobs in Europe and Canada.

"It is sad that we have not yet reached the age of sophistication to support artists in any of the arts," Miss Hering said.

The National Endowment for the Arts is the first government agency created to fund the arts and was created by an act of Congress in 1965.

"It is still substantially less than European funding and is just beginning to make a dent in the needs," Janet Ottinger explained. "We are a funding agency without control, although we only fund special projects and have special guidelines. Our major area of support (in the dance division) is touring, which is extremely important to professional companies because there is not sufficient audience to stay one place."

With a budget of $38.2 million it is difficult for the agency to achieve its goal of making the arts available to all, and the agency is constantly faced with a decrease in funding because Congress feels social issues should have precedence over the arts, not realizing social issues are so closely associated with the arts, she said.

Miss Ottinger is attending the regional festival as a part of her job, "seeing what's happening in the country to be responsive to the needs."

Mrs. Waldheim's Home: Other UN

By RICKY ROSENTHAL
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The United Nations has two homes on the East River in New York City.

One is the glass and concrete complex where meetings are held. The other is the official residence of Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim at 3 Sutton Place.

Since December, 1972, Mrs. Waldheim has been furnishing the five floors of the Georgian-style residence. The house also has a luxury unknown to most New Yorkers — a sweeping, grass-blanketed backyard — which is shared with such neighbors as the Paul Hoffmans. (He once headed the United Nations Development Program.)

The Secretary-General's house was donated by the president of Steuben Glass, Arthur Houghton. His gift was made to the United Nations through the United Nations Association (NA), a United States citizen's organization that disseminates information about the U.N. and its work.

This first official residence in the United Nations' history was built by J. P. Morgan for his daughter Anne. The house is bisected by a spiral staircase that leads to informal private living quarters.

THE HOUSE has some 13 rooms — including a commodious kitchen and dining room facing the East River on the first floor. Eighteen guests can be seated for conversation, and the room seems to hum with meals enjoyed there.

In a niche are prized Viennese dishes — a gift of David Rockefeller. They are Old Vienna, Augarten, with Viennese motifs.

Mrs. Waldheim says she has done "a lot of poking around in antique shops" and netted some remarkable pieces. An Austrian tabernacle and a commode in baroque style are situated in a 38-foot drawing room which is covered by an enormous pastel needlepoint carpet, the gift of New York City Commission to the U.N., John Loeb.

When finished the room "will not be stiff, but cozy," said Mrs. Waldheim.

During a recent visit to China, she collected a vase and several lacquered chests. "You cannot buy old things in China, they cannot be exported," said Mrs. Waldheim. "But they did take me to two antique shops."

Her decorating philosophy is: "Certain things from the Louis's (15th and 16th) and a Chinese piece in between." She wants no UN blue nor Austrian red-and-white flag.

A painting by Cecilia Beaux, an American portraitist of the 1920s, graces a staircase. "It is the most talked-about painting," said Mrs. Waldheim, indicating the many lent by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. "People often ask, "Is this you when you were young?' "

ART IS one interest of Mrs. Waldheim, and her bookcases in the dark-stained, antique-paneled English library are filled with texts — from Durer to "20,000 Years of Fashion."

The rose-burgundy library has several English game chests (1875), a Chinese Chippendale table, a massive Dutch writing desk, and two Persian carpets. The carpets were the gift of Prime Minister Amir-Abbas Hoveida of Iran. All this is watched over by "Miss Sparrow," a painting by Thomas Gainsborough. Companion paintings in this room are pastoral — Courbet's "A Brook in the Forest" and two Corots.

The Pink Salon is a furnishing confection. Claude Monet's "The Seine at Vetheuil" and two rare Angelica Kauffmans, "Venus" and "Eros," hang there. A recent gift of a solid gold box from the Prime Minister of Thailand adorns a coffee table. Brass sconces of indeterminate weight — "It takes two men to put them up" — and andirons are on loan. There also is a Renoir, "The Artist's House at Cagnes," several Japanese prints, and a Chagall print, with Spode and Limoge China sprinkled about the room like tasteful porcelain raindrops.

Having just returned from Panama and Bogota, traveling is much on Mrs. Waldheim's mind. One solution to the problem of what to do with extra change at the close of a trip is an envelope invented by Irene Scheffcy of Union Station, Pa., for UNICEF. The material for the envelope was developed by Dupont; it won't tear or become water-damaged.

"WHEN YOU are leaving your flight, put your change in an envelope, and it will go postpaid to the UN children's fund," said Mrs. Waldheim.

She recalled the subway in China made of "marvelous shades of marble," and remembered how it "rained sideways at the Great Wall — I never saw such a rain beat down on us like that."

She recounted how much rehabilitation work with children now is being done where there used to be no interest. In Thailand, for example, "They are very proud of their school for the retarded."

Mrs. Waldheim said she has found "very idealistic people" working all over the world. She is still puzzled, she added, by the fact that many Americans who should know better "still think the United Nations is a world government."

Shelled Pecans Mostly Native

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (UPI) — Imported pecans yield more meat than native types, but most of the shelled pecan meats available in grocery stores come from native varieties.

Judy Ann Grubbs, foods and nutrition specialist for Texas A&M University's agricultural extension service, says it generally takes 2.5 pounds of native pecans in the shell to get one pound of meats. Two pounds of the imported varieties will yield at least one pound of shelled meats, she says.

The Egg Sizes

NEW YORK (UPI) — Egg size is based on weight per dozen. According to a standard set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, extra large eggs must weigh at least 27 ounces per dozen; large, 24 ounces; medium 21 ounces and small, 18 ounces.

GENERATION RAP

by Helen and Sue Bottel

A Tribute To A Real Friend On The Eve Of Mother's Day

DEAR RAP:

I want to tell you about my best friend.

She's almost twice my age. She's mature, yet she is the first to say you're never too old to learn something new. I know she isn't perfect, and she would be the first to admit it. But I wouldn't want her any other way.

I've told her things I wouldn't even write in my diary. I know my innermost thoughts are safe with her. I hope she knows the same of me.

When I am troubled, I can always turn to her. She will never refuse me a shoulder to cry on.

I would never hurt her intentionally, and I know from past experiences she would protect me as best she can.

I love her dearly, and I'm sure she knows. But all the same, please print this and satisfy my foolish whim by saying to her and whoever else may read:

Mom: I'm proud to be your daughter! — CARRIE OF FRESNO

DEAR CARRIE:

We saved your letter until Mother's Day because it's about the nicest gift a girl can give to her mother.

Let's hope quite a lot of "Moms" read it along with their special breakfast-in-bed on May 13th. — HELEN AND SUE

HELEN AND SUE:

I'm a white, middle-class male and I, too, feel discriminated against. Not only minorities (black, red, brown) get first consideration at colleges or for jobs, but we must also contend with women now. Those "quotas" must be filled — then, if there is any money left, we white guys get a whack at things.

In the past three weeks I've missed out on two jobs because I wasn't female. They're even infiltrating the police department, insisting they be put on regular beats.

What's a guy to do, outside of becoming a transvestite? — DONE OUT AND IN (and needing money for college)

DOAI:

We hear Ma Bell is looking for "sons." In some areas the telephone company has pulled a switch: it's actively recruiting male operators.

'Round-the-clock hours make this work great for college students. Good luck. — HELEN AND SUE

DEAR RAP:

I'm in favor of lowering discrimination, but I think our society is going too far. Believe me, I'm not prejudiced —just desperate.

I recently found out that one of my friends, a member of a minority group, received $1600 to attend a junior college. He has a 2.0 grade point average from high school. This is just one of many cases.

I am an 18-year-old freshman in a university near my home. I was a lifetime member of the California State Scholarship Federation and was quite active in high school.

Yet I applied for many scholarships last fall, receiving only one for $250 which lasted only one semester. This was given to me by an organization of which I am a member.

Thanks for printing the middle-class male's side of it, Helen and Sue. We need help too. — CONCERNED STUDENT

How To Avoid Chafing At Armholes

By EUNICE FARMER
(Distributed by Register and Tribune Syndicate)

DEAR EUNICE,

I play a great deal of tennis and enjoy making my own dresses. I find I can really save money. My problem is that the dresses I make always rub my skin raw at the armholes. Why aren't patterns cut the same as the ready-made dresses?

MARY M.

DEAR MAY,

Since I'm not a tennis player, I found some avid fans who were willing to share their experiences with the most successful type of dresses to wear for comfort as well as easy care.

The problem you are referring to involves the shaping of the armhole. There is one dress that is especially successful in every way. It has been designed by Vogue Pattern Company, number 8549. It is cut with square armholes to relieve the strain of an armhole cut too high since your arms are moving forward more than when wearing an ordinary dress.

If you do not find this pattern, you may make your adjustments on any pattern. The width of the shoulder is also important, especially when an ordinary armhole is used. It is often cut too wide.

When stitching your facing to the armholes, curve your stitching line in toward the garment, from shoulder to underarm. In other words, your seam will be slightly wider and can be trimmed back later. This is a much simpler operation than trying to cut your pattern different and then trying to cut your facing to fit.

If you would like a square armhole and your pattern doesn't call for one, simply take your ruler and draw a straight line extending from the seamline of the armhole, meeting a straight line extending from the underarm seam. You can stitch deeper if you desire, but try it first until you are sure of yourself.

Tennis dresses should fit fairly loose. The neckline is up to the individual. Some prefer a "V" neckline, others a jewel neckline and still others prefer a small flat collar. You can add a variety of trims today (even touches of color). There are still a few private clubs that do not allow color, check first.

As to fabrics for your best comfort, if it is extremely hot, and you are playing on outdoor courts, your choice should definitely be cotton. Cottons today are all treated for easy care, they can be washed in the machine and dried in the dryer. Cotton breathes, absorbs the moisture and is cool to wear. I personally feel that cotton is more attractive than knits.

If heat is no problem, you can choose one of the many varieties of polyester knits. The fun part of making your own is the wide variety of trims and individual touches you can add to make your own individual look.

Be sure to remember to preshrink all fabrics and trims, including zippers, before you sit down to begin sewing. This will insure perfect results after your garment has been laundered.

The pattern suggested today is only one of the many avilable in all the major pattern books. Try them. I don't imagine you'll ever be willing to spend the money on ready-made ones again. Besides, they are so simple to make, the beginner with sewing can come up with a successful dress on her first attempt.

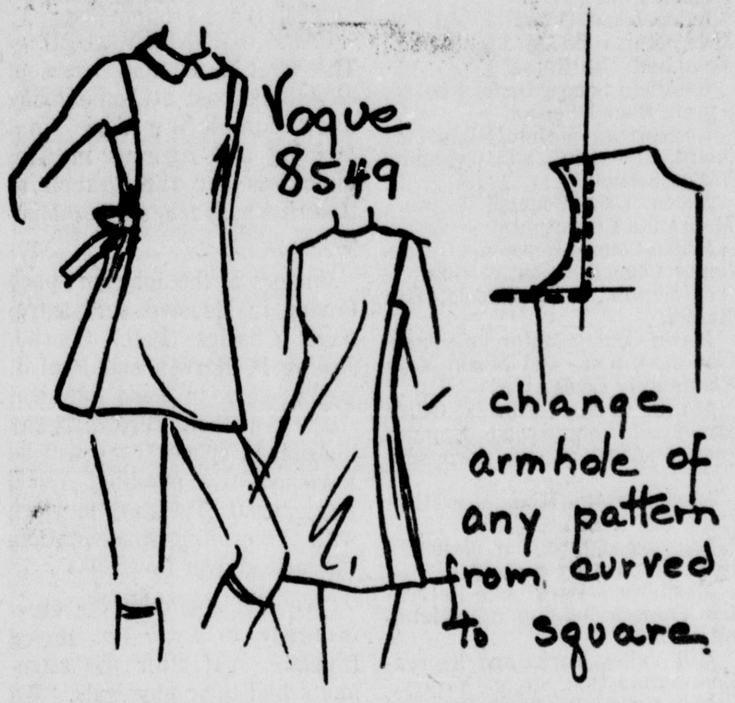
"When sewing set-in sleeves in small children's clothes, it's sometimes difficult to sew with the side seams and sleeve seams already sewn up.

"The solution I have found that works perfectly is to sew the sleeve into your garment from notch to notch over the cap of the sleeve, while the sleeve and garment are still flat. Then sew the side seam of the garment and the underarm seam of the sleeve. Now pin the balance of the sleeve into the armhole and machine stitch from notch to notch, at the underarm section. This has worked perfectly for me, in all garments, not just for my children."



DEAR EUNICE,

I would like to adapt a regular coat collar to one similar to those on purchased raincoats. They seem to have an extra strip of fabric attached to the neckline of the coat. The collar is attached to this, rather than to the neckline seam. Can I simply add a strip of fabric for this effect?

MRS. L. M.

DEAR MRS. L. M.,

The effect you are referring to is created with a "collar stand" similar to the type used in men's shirts. I wouldn't suggest you simply cut a strip of fabric and apply it without any guidelines unless you are a very experienced seamstress.

Today, you will find many shirt-jackets that can be worn as suits or short coats. Buy one of these and use the neck application on your pattern by placing the two necklines of the patterns over each other to check the cutting line at the neck. Your neckline must be cut the same as for the pattern you will be using, including the neckband and collar.

It isn't difficult, but it is important to remember that patterns are precision-made and each part is designed to fit the next section perfectly. You can't just cut a new piece with no thought about how it will fit the rest of the garment. It's fun to change garments and the more you experiment the easier it will be. Just keep one point in mind, each part of a pattern is designed to fit that particular pattern, and when interchanged, you will have to take an extra minute to check the way it will affect any other part of the pattern that comes in contact with it.

DEAR EUNICE,

My daughter is to be a bridesmaid this summer and she has a problem of excessive perspiration. Since the gown she will be wearing is sleeveless, what can I do to help her? I can't use the dress shields we normally use.

FRANTIC

DEAR FRANTIC,

Excessive perspiration isn't the only reason for disastrous results in bridesmaids' dresses. It seems that under situations that present stress, everyone is apt to perspire. I personally have seen many weddings almost ruined by the obvious moisture under the arms. It's caused by nerves, but hang on, there is a cure.

After the dressses are completed, test my method before you apply it to your gown, although we have used it on the finest silks and satins with excellent results. Purchase a can of fabric finish spray, the kind used for water-repellency. Lightly spray the underarm section of your gown, both inside and outside. When it dries, you can repeat the same thing. Do not hold the spray too close to garment. If it works perfectly on your sample of fabric, you will not have to worry about using it on the gowns. This can actually be used for any of your garments, not just for weddings or evening clothes. Please let me know how it has worked for you, I love your letters.

For professional-looking set-in sleeves you will want to try Eunice Farmer's sleeve methods in her informative booklet "All About Sleeves." To obtain your booklet send 10 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Eunice Farmer in care of the Independent-Journal.

Sausalito townhome living has just hit a new low.

These homes are all built in and around the hills, and they all have views (some better than others). The natural wood exteriors and architecture are in keeping with the beauty of the area. And these two and three level homes have other features. Like a wood burning fireplace. And private decks.

The townhome ownership concept gives you all the ownership benefits for about the same monthly amount you may be paying for rent. There are two and three bedroom units with 1½ and 2½ bathrooms respectively. Prices range from $43,950 to $52,450. But hurry. Sausalito never looked this good.

From Northbound 101, take the Rodeo Exit and follow the signs. From Southbound 101, take the Sausalito Exit, turn right at Bridgeway and then right on Nevada.

Frog Entry Of 2,000 Is Expected

ANGELS CAMP (UPI) — Nearly 80,000 persons are expected to jam this once booming gold mining camp May 17-20 to watch 2,000 bullfrogs compete in the century-old Jumping Frog Jubilee.

This tiny Gold Rush town of 3,000 was the setting Mark Twain used in his short story, "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" — the basis for the annual frog jumping contest.

To win the jubilee's top prize money of $1,200 a frog must beat the world record jump set in 1966 by a frog named Ripper who leaped 19 feet 3 and 1-3 inches. Owners of Ripper were Bill Proctor and Leonard Hall of Lafayette.

If a world record is not set, the final purse will be only $300.

Bob Maxwell, a spokesman for the jubilee, said anyone can enter a frog for a $2 fee and more than half the contestants are youngsters.

The Skylab Crew Said Fit, Ready

Doctors at the Johnson Space Center in Houston said astronauts Charles (Pete) Conrad, Joseph P. Kerwin and Paul J. Weitz were in good physical shape for their record 28-day mission in space. They will be launched in a modified Apollo ferry craft Tuesday to dock with the orbiting space station, the largest ever flown.

"We feel confident the crew is ready to fly," Dr. Royce Hawkins said after the astronauts had their physicals. "We see no medical problems that would impact Tuesday's launch."

A massive Saturn 5 rocket will thrust the 84-ton Skylab into a 269-mile-high Earth orbit at 1:30 p.m. EDT Monday for the start of eight months of space exploration. The three astronauts will be carried atop a Saturn 1B rocket 23 ½ hours later.

Conrad, Kerwin and Weitz were spending their last day off at home before launch, and were to fly to the cape Sunday. They have been in semiquarantine for three weeks to keep them from contracting any infections or illness.

The astronauts have been eating Skylab food since they began their isolation so doctors can gather data to compare to tests during and after the mission.

Testing man's ability to stand prolonged space journeys is one of Skylab's major objectives, along with detailed study of the Earth and sun. Two other three-man crews will fly to the lab for 56 days each later this year.

To Return Home

MADRID (UPI) — Former Argentine President Juan Peron will return home in July or earlier to direct his Justicialist Party, Governor-elect Juan Manuel Irrazabal of Misiones province in Argentina said yesterday.

PROPERTY FINANCING EXPLAINED

A mortgage, or note and deed of trust, is a contract which makes property the security for payment of a loan. The property is said to be "hypothecated", which means to give something as security while retaining the right of use.

There are several types of mortgage loans, any of which may be negotiated under certain conditions. Interest rates are of course subject to the pressures of the general money market. FHA, VA, and Cal Vet are guaranteed by government agencies.

The sale of a home can be complicated for the seller as well as the buyer. For instance, when selling a home, what pitfalls do you look for in negotiating a "second"? In order to protect your own interest when buying or selling property, always deal with a member office of the Marin County Board of Realtors.

In selling a home, use the Multiple Listing Service. You'll save time, trouble, and may well realize a higher price for your property than if you tried to sell it yourself. Remember the member offices of the Marin County Board of Realtors. Your Real Estate Professionals.

Apartments For Rent (Unfurnished)—2720

Is your apartment or house standing vacant — and losing you money?

Have you ever thought about how much money you lose each day or week your apartment stands vacant? Here's a chart to point out the drain on your income:

YOU ARE LOSING

If Your Monthly Rental Price Is:	Every Day	Every Week	Every Two Weeks
$150	$ 5.00	$35.00	$70.00
175	5.83	40.81	81.62
200	6.67	46.69	93.38
225	7.50	52.50	105.00
250	8.33	58.31	116.62
275	9.16	64.12	128.24
300	10.00	70.00	140.00
325	10.83	75.81	151.62

(Based on a 30-day month)

Add to this the cost of maintaining a vacant apartment and you have an even larger loss. Doesn't it make sense to: FIRST, run an I-J Classified ad, & SECOND, to take a little time and run a BETTER ad — more benefits, more discription, less abbreviations (82% of readers don't know the meaning of AEK).

Angela Davis Forms An Activist Group

CHICAGO (UPI) — Avowed Communist and political activist Angela Davis has formed a group called "Against Racist and Political Repression."

Miss Davis, flanked by two former convicts, an indicted minister and American Indiah Movement (AIM) leader Clyde Bellecourt, told a news conference yesterday that her organization's goal will be to build mass support.

"We are talking about defending those rights we are supposed to enjoy," she said.

Miss Davis said details of the organization will be worked out this weekend at a "founding conference" attended by members of more than 500 groups, including the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, National Council of Churches, and the Meatcutters and Butchers Union.

Asked how such a large, diverse group could expect to form a unified organization, Miss Davis replied, "It does not presume to be a political party or to defend a political ideology. Some of us may be revolutionaries. Some of us may be radical Democrats, but all of us have a common goal of ending repression."

She said she hopes the organization will draw the kind of support she did last year during her trial on charges of murder and kidnap in connection with the Marin County Courthouse shootout that resulted in four deaths, including a judge. She was acquitted.

Doomsday In Marin—A 'Quake' Hits

HELICOPTER RESCUE — Rescue workers hustle two persons on stretchers from a Hamilton Air Force Base helicopter to waiting doctors at Marin General Hospital. The airborne rescue of persons hurt in a bus crash in West Marin was part of the county's first full-blown earthquake disaster drill, in which volunteers played the parts of the wounded to test emergency medical services in the event of a real earthquake.

By PAUL LIBERATORE

According to the scenario for Marin's first full-blown earthquake disaster drill, the earth convulsed along the San Andreas Fault in West Marin at 2 p.m. yesterday and shock waves rattled San Rafael High School, collapsing a portion of the school's cafeteria. (Other disaster stories, pictures, page 1.)

Inside, at about 2:05 p.m., 75 persons playing the parts of the wounded began screaming in mock terror and pain on cue as the school alarm sounded.

Three young girls, their faces and limbs bleeding and broken, burst out the front doors and fell to the pavement as newsmen with television and still cameras jostled for position.

The other injured, wearing elaborate makeup that had been applied by students from the College of Marin, lay on the cafeteria floor amid overturned tables and toppled trash cans.

The wounded, recruited from College of Marin and San Rafael High School plus some volunteer adults, writhed and groaned, each playing out the symptoms of his particular degree of injury.

The San Rafael Fire Department arrived first, within minutes of the initial shock of the mock disaster. Firemen clamped resuscitators over the mouths of some, began applying gauze bandages and splints to others.

Police barked orders at student spectators to move back while the first few members of two medical "triage" teams filtered through the bodies and confusion and began to treat the wounded. They arrived about 2:26 p.m.

Although it was all a drill, the wounded had been so realistically made up and took their parts in the drama so seriously, that it would have been difficult for the casual passerby to tell it from the real thing.

"I need 10 volunteers," the head of one of the triage teams shouted out the front door at high school students milling outside. "Take these tags, write down the names of those hurt and put the tags on the bodies," he said as the volunteers hustled inside.

By 2:30 p.m., 30 minutes after the start of the exercise and the floor still littered with unattended bodies, the first white-uniformed ambulance attendants arrived.

Two ambulances, one from United and one from Bay Cities ambulance services, backed up to the doors of the cafeteria as the triage teams sorted the wounded, treating the more seriously injured first and loading them on stretchers.

By 2:40 p.m., the first victim was placed inside the first ambulance and by 2:44 p.m. the ambulance was on its way to the hospital. The injured were to be taken to one of three hospitals available — Ross General, Marin General or Kaiser Foundation Hospital.

"The triage teams arrived very quickly," said Richard Bettini, coordinator of the medical end of the disaster plan, "considering they had to be phoned individually at their offices."

Each team was made up of nine members, including three doctors, one a medical officer who headed the team, two nurses, two veterinarians and two dentists, Bettini said.

By 2:50 p.m., bodies on stretchers were lined up on the sidewalk in front of the cafeteria. Most had been given first aid and wore tags giving their names and the extent of their injuries. Some tags had red stickers, identifying the most critical who were to be hospitalized first.

At 2:55 p.m., the second ambulance departed for the hospital carrying four injured.

The ambulatory wounded were hustled onto a school bus that sat in the hot sun on an asphalt parking lot beside the cafeteria. Although it was nearly full with victims with varying degrees of injury, it was not driven from the lot.

Members of the VHF Expeditionary Society, an amateur radio club, were at each of three disaster sites to coordinate ambulances and pass on information from the communications center.

At 3:17 p.m., an hour and 17 minutes after the start, a third ambulance arrived and backed up to the cafeteria doors. By 3:24 it was gone, but there was only room for four victims plus one who rode sitting up in the driver's compartment.

By 3:30 p.m., 33 injured had been taken to hospitals. Five were known dead, many were aboard the bus which still stood in the lot and still others lay on stretchers on the ground.

"We could use more ambulances," coordinator Bettini said.

At 3:33, a United ambulance arrived, followed at 3:35 by one from Bay Cities.

One official, glancing down at a woman on a stretcher, indicated that she could get up and either get aboard the bus or wait for room in an ambulance.

"Nothing doing," she said. "I'm in shock and I'm timing you to see how long it takes you to get me out of here."

The communications center at the Civic Center reported that rescue operations at San Rafael High School were wrapped up at 4 p.m., two hours later.

Marin General Gears For Cases

By PATRICIA PERRY

Marin General Hospital authorities were notified at 2:30 p.m. yesterday that 30 stretcher cases would be sent from San Rafael High School where the simulated earthquake had hit hard. No indication of the type of injuries suffered was given.

"That's to be expected," said hospital administrator Ray K. Bolinger. "You'll just get sketchy information at the beginning."

The hospital immediately launched into "Triage Phase I," its disaster drill when 30 or less disaster victims are admitted.

There already were 11 doctors in the hospital, including chief of staff Dr. William Clark, who directed operations.

"Wheelchairs and wheeled stretchers were placed in readiness and doctors, nurses and stretcher bearers waited. And waited. And waited.

The first ambulance arrived at 2:55 p.m., bearing four simulated patients, realistically made-up students who groaned and screamed as a doctor, assisted by enthusiastic nurses, gave each a quick examination before they were taken to either the emergency room, a ward or the operating room. Most went to the emergency room.

Shortly before 3 p.m. the hospital was notified that a helicopter bringing five serious injured patients from a West Marin bus mishap would land in the field next to the employees' parking lot on Bon Air Road.

A vintage Air Force ambulance arrived at the landing site soon after, and the hospital dispatched one of its pickup trucks to await the helicopter. Again everyone waited, and waited.

The helicopter, from Hamilton Air Force Base, landed at 3:25 p.m. Laurence A. Weinstein from the county office of emergency services said the long time lapse was caused by transportation and communication difficulties in West Marin.

After the bus was supposed to have overturned one mile north of Point Reyes Station, said Weinstein, an emergency center was set up at West Marin School, and workers commandeered vehicles.

"The helicopter had no trouble getting from Hamilton to West Marin," said Weinstein, "but no one remembered to call for it." He said Kirby ultimately called for the helicopter at 2:40 p.m., or some 40 minutes after the exercise began.

The five stretcher cases were unloaded onto the grass, and after a quick examination by a doctor, transported up to the hospital by the old ambulance and in the back of the pickup truck.

In the hospital's emergency room, a blackboard listed the victims, their injuries, where they went and which doctors was working on them.

By 3:45 p.m. two hadd died - one in the operating room - and four were still in surgery.

"I definitely need a bigger blackboard," complained Dr. Clark, as he agreed to take more patients, an overflow from Kaiser Foundation Hospital.

DISASTER VICTIMS — A Red Cross nurse rushes to the aid of two young girls who stumbled screaming and bleeding from the cafeteria at San Rafael High School yesterday in a disaster drill simulating an earthquake. A total of 75 persons realistically made up to appear as if they had been hurt in a building cave-in, played the parts of the dead and injured. (Independent-Journal photo by Jim Kean)

FAST AID — Attendants are a blur as they whisk a volunteer playing the part of a disaster victim on a gurney down a corridor at Ross General Hospital. The scene was part of Marin's first full-scale earthquake disaster drill designed to test emergency medical preparedness. The exercise simulated a quake in West Marin and the unjuries and destruction predicted to follow.

The 'Actors' Win Plaudits For Roles

BY FRANK FARRARA

The multipurpose room at Hill Junior High School in Novato wasn't the place for anyone with a weak stomach at about 2 p.m. yesterday.

Fifty "victims" injured in the "collapse" of the building as part of a disaster drill started groaning, screaming and thrashing about.

Simulated blooksoaked clothing smeared the floor, and broken bones (animal bones held to human limbs with mortician's wax) protruded from bodies lying about the room.

Cries of "I'm dying . . . help . . . help me . . . and do something" rang out with a tone of authenticity.

The alarm went out to the Novato Fire Department and firemen arrived within minutes and started carrying and escorting victims outside to a lawn area.

Explorer Scouts from the Novato Law Enforcement Post, male and female, joined in aiding the victims and Novato police took over traffic and crowd control.

All victims were removed from the "wrecked building" by 2:13 and the medical team, including doctors, started aiding the victims and sorting them out for priority for treatment.

Pink disaster tags were placed on the victims, some marked with the red label for immediate attention and others with a black label for "delayed" attention.

A green-and-white united ambulance arrived at about 2:20 p.m. and stood by while doctors identified the more seriously wounded who were to be taken to Marin General Hospital by ambulance.

A doctor, walking through the array of victims spread out in the shade of a large tree, commented as he walked: "That's third degrees burn . . . and that's major surgery . . . she goes to Marin General."

Elsewhere medical teams bandaged heads and placed cardboard splints on broken limbs, while scouts filled out information on the disaster tags.

A Novato Fire Department pickup truck starting hauling less seriously injured victims to Novato General Hospital and Indian Valley Medical Clinic, and some ambulatory victims walked to the nearby Medical center.

About 20 victims were loaded or walked aboard a large school bus and taken to Kaiser Foundation Hospital in San Rafael, and the ambulance, carrying the five more seriously injured, left for Marin General.

With several victims still awaiting transportation, City Mgr. Charles A. Brown took two to Novato General Hospital in a city station wagon.

At about 3:07 p.m. all but one victim had been removed and several minutes later, he was picked up by the fire department's pickup.

By 3:15, 75 minutes after the "disaster," all that remained were the bandage wrappings on the lawn that were being cleaned up by a group of students who had been sitting nearby watching the action.

OF GOD AND MAN

Decision On Sainthood Of Pope John Awaited

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International

Next month marks the 10th anniversary of the death of Angelo Roncalli, possibly the greatest Christian leader of the century.

Who was Angelo Roncalli? Only a small fraction of the people of the world were aware that was his given name. In the latter years of his life, he was better known affectionately to millions as Papa John —"Papa Giovanni" to Romans. To the world at large he was Pope John XXIII.

During a brief reign of less than five years on the papal throne, he made more profound and far-reaching contributions to the health of the Christian movement than any pope of recent history.

Consider only a few of his achievements:

—He ended 500 years of cold war among Christians and created between Catholics and Protestants a new "ecumenical spirit" of mutual respect and cooperation.

—He won worldwide respect and affection, not only from Christians of every denomination, but from Jews, Moslems, Hindus, Buddhists, humanists and Marxists.

—He restored to the papacy, through the sheer power of his personal goodness, a prestige it had not enjoyed since the time of the Borgias.

There have been widespread suggestions that Pope John be named a saint. The official word from the papal court in Rome is that the "cause" of John XXIII —that is, the question of whether he was truly a saint —is being "investigated through normal procedures."

Some are accusing the Vatican of stalling. Critics — and there are many —say cardinals of the Roman Curia who never approved of Pope John's reforms hope to postpone indefinitely giving them the posthumous endorsement implied by canonization.

There is another consideration that doubtless enters into the Vatican's procrastination.

Pope Paul VI, who was Pope John's chosen successor, has never achieved the affection and respect of his predecessor.

Pope Paul's critics say that for him to declare his predecessor a saint —which he has authority to do any time he sees fit —would dramatize an eclipse of papal prestige which has taken place since John's death.

While some may call him a poor pope, Paul VI is a good man, and he certainly would not stoop personally to withholding canonization of John XXIII in order to protect his own vanity.

But he doesn't have to do it personally. He has only to listen to the voices of Curia courtiers who tell him that the "cause" is being handled "in the normal and proper way." That explanation probably sounds reasonable to Paul VI, who once was a Vatican bureaucrat himself.

While John XXIII remains officially uncanonized, millions of Catholics and non-Catholics already have proclaimed in their hearts the saintliness of this peasant from Bergamo who was one of the most humble, compassionate and courageous figures the church has produced since Francis of Assissi.

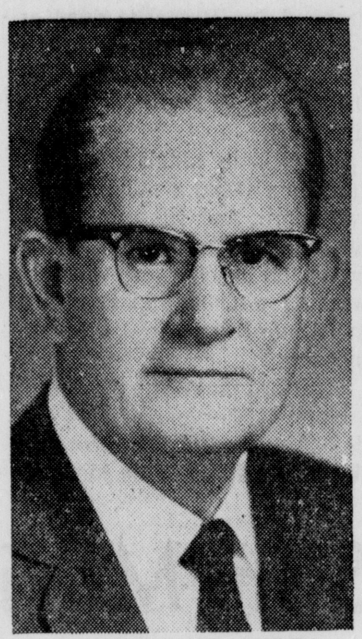
Dr. Herschel Hobbs To Lead Lecture Day



DR. HERSCHEL HOBBS
To speak at seminary

Dr. Herschel H. Hobbs, visiting professor of preaching at Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, will be Lecture-Dialogue Day guest at the Seminary May 17, in Room 210, W. T. Conner Hall, beginning at 9:50 a.m.

The public is invited to hear the former president of the 12-million-member Southern Baptist Convention speak and lead the discussion. Topic for the day will be "The Baptist Faith and Message," the official statement of faith adopted by the SBC in 1963.

Dr. Hobbs was appointed chairman of the committee in the 1962 SBC Convention held in San Francisco. The document was then adopted by the 1963 Convention in Kansas City, Mo. Presidents of state Southern Baptist Conventions at that time made up the committee.

"I have been asked to evaluate the statement," Dr. Hobbs said, "and to discuss the conditions which prompted the statement."

Dr. Hobbs has served as principal preacher for the International Baptist Hour radio broadcast since 1958. He served as vice president of the Baptist World Alliance from 1965 - 70.

He has authored 35 books and contributed to numerous volumes compiled by others. His more recent works include: "Cosmic Drama: Exposition on the Book of Revelation," 1971; "An Exposition of the Gospel of Mark," 1970; and "Epistles to the Corinthians," 1969.

Hobbs has pastored churches in Alabama, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana and Oklahoma. He is active in civic and community affairs in Oklahoma City where he recently retired after serving for 23 years as pastor of the First Baptist Church.

The guest professor was graduated from Howard College (now Samford University) in Birmingham, Ala. He was awarded the master of theology degree and the Ph.D. in New Testament interpretation by Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky. He is also the recipient of numerous honorary degrees and awards, including being named to the Oklahoma Hall of Fame.

Church Youth Will Present Sunday Service

The youth group of the Sausalito Presbyterian Church tomorrow will present the 9:30 a.m. serivce and an original dramatic presentation of "Rebirth." Featured with the drama will be a liturgical dance and a children's musical offering.

"Rebirth" will focus on modern man's struggle with the material and social influences and pressures which separate man from his spirit and from God, according to Sam Shafer, director.

Shafer said the play is designed to show how Christianity is as well-equipped now as in the past to solve men's problems.

"HAVE WE NOT ALL ONE FATHER? HATH NOT ONE God CREATED US?" Malachi 2:10
A lot of people acknowledge God as Father. But do they really understand the man He made?
As you get a deeper understanding of the Bible, the spiritual nature of man and of all creation appears. Then Christian unity and the brotherhood of man appear in your life, too.
Selections from the Bible and Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy, to be read in our church service this Sunday, will help you understand the Bible's message of brotherly love in a new light.
We'd love to welcome you.

Dodgers' Brewer Sparkles Vs. Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Twice in his pitching career Jim Brewer had surgery performed on his left elbow.

The first time was seven years ago and he came back to be one of the major leagues' most consistent relief pitchers for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The second time was last winter and when spring training began this year, Brewer said he felt he could do it again. But early season problems led to some doubts until a week or so ago when he suddenly started to get batters out with his famed screwball.

Friday night in Candlestick Park, Brewer took charge as in days of old, coming in to snuff out an eighth inning rally and then wrapping things up in the ninth as the Dodgers held on for a 3-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

"This could have been my best performance of the year," said the 35-year-old Brewer after striking out two of the four batters he faced with his screwball.

The Dodgers, with their sixth victory in the last seven games, suddenly are in the National League West race only 4 ½ games behind the pace-setting Giants, whom they face again today and Sunday.

Friday night they needed a break and got it in the sixth when old nemesis Juan Marichal walked two batters and Dave Kingman let a smash to third by Bill Russell go through him. That scored two runs and gave the Dodgers and Al Downing a 2-0 lead. Manny Mota tripled in the eighth and Joe Ferguson scored him with a sacrifice fly.

"I felt real good," said Marichal, "but I was wilder than usual. I couldn't control my fastball. That's why Mota hit one up in his eyes for the triple that beat me."

The way Downing was pitching—a four-hit shutout—it seemed like enough but the Giants rallied for two runs in the eighth to chase him.

Downing gained credit for his fourth victory in five decisions while Brewer picked up his third save. Marichal, who entered the game with a 35-17 lifetime record against the Dodgers, is now 4-3.

Giants' manager Charlie Fox said Ed Goodson probably would replace Kingman at third for the remaining weekend games.

"Errors are part of the game, but there's no doubt that Kingman is pressing at the plate," said Fox.

Redwood '9' Wins, Takes Championship

Gondak's Double Tips Tam

When Matt Gondak drilled a double with one man out in the seventh inning yesterday afternoon, he gave Redwood High School two runs, a victory, a baseball championship and a place in the history books.

Gondak's bases-loaded hit to left field enabled the Giants to overcome a two-run rally by Tamalpais in the top of the seventh and post a 4-3 Marin County Athletic League victory, clinching the undisputed championship.

Redwood stands 11-1 with two games left on the schedule, while second-place Novato is 8-4. Thus, Redwood became the first team in the 14-year history of the MCAL to win back-to-back titles, according to coach Al Endriss. The Giants (21-4) also tied a school mark for victories set by the 1965 team (21-5).

The triumph propelled them into the Redwood High Baseball Tournament of Champions along with seven other league titleholders from the Bay Area May 24-26 at Albert Field.

"There's no question Gene Frey and Mark Ruggles carried us pitching-wise until past Easter," said Endriss, "but then up steps the big sophomore, Eddie Andersen, and he really made the difference."

Endriss praised the hitting of first baseman Ross Secor and second sacker Daryl Edralin in the first half of the season, and center fielder Mike Connor, third baseman Phil Bacigalupi and outfielder Gondak later.

Defensively, he singled out left fielder Jeff Vogel and catcher Doug Hartman for consistent play and noted that shortstop Gary LaTorre, filling a hole vacated by graduated Scott Barrie, made only one error in league competition.

If that sounds like the whole starting lineup, it's because it is. Most were present on the 12-2 team which won the title last year, and Hartman, Bacigalupi, LaTorre, Vogel and Andersen will return next year.

SAN RAFAEL BOWS

Novato Whips Baseball Foe

Novato High School struck for six runs in the third inning to defeat San Rafael yesterday, 10-3, in the battle for second place in Marin County Athletic League baseball.

The victory at Albert Field gave Novato an 8-4 record and dropped San Rafael to third at 7-5. It was the sixth win in the Hornets' last seven games and the Bulldogs' fourth defeat in five tries.

Stan Conte singled for one run, Tom Conklin singled home two more, and subsequent tallies came home on a throwing error and bases-loaded walks to winning pitcher Ray Stratford and Dave Brazell in the Novato uprising.

Stratford picked up his fourth victory of the year against one defeat, tying him for second in the MCAL in wins. He survived a three-run San Rafael fourth which saw Steve D'Ambra single home one run, Craig Saunders walk with the bases loaded for another and John Sims (who was three for three) single across the third.

San Marin Nine Defeats Drake

Aided by what coach Ron Butori called "good fielding support from his teammates," San Marin High School pitcher Matt Womack went the distance in his first start of the Marin County Athletic League season and set down visiting Drake on four hits yesterday, 4-1.

San Marin scored in the first inning when Drake's catcher made a throwing error during an attempted double steal with runners on first and third. Ed LaRocque's squeeze bunt accounted for another run in the second, and in the third Chris Purdy's ground single up the middle scored one man from third and another came in when Drake's center fielder bobbled the ball.

Defense gems included a play at the plate on a bases-loaded squeeze in the fifth inning, and a pickoff and double play on successive plays inthe sixty.

Russians End Tour With Cage Victory

"They just overpowered us and we tired out," University of Kentucky cage star Kevin Grevey said. "I hate to make excuses but I just did get over that tonsillectomy."

The 6-foot-6 Greivey had nothing to be ashamed of as he contributed 26 points to the Marathon cause along with 21 by fellow Wildcat Jim Andrews.

The Russians overcame an early 18-11 deficit and with three key buckets by 6-6 forward Aleksandr Salnikov during a 17-0 spree. The Russians took a 37-23 advantage with a little over five minutes remaining in the first half.

At halftime the Russians held a 51-40 lead over a visibly tired group of AAU national champs before 4,000 fans at Henry Clay High School here.

In the second half the Russians took advantage of the tired American squad and at one stretch surged to a lead of 30 points 93-63 with 8:40 left in the contest.

The Russians, which ended their American tour with a 3-4 record, boasted only three members from the team which defeated the American Olympic team at Munich last year in the disputed 51-50 game.

Blue's Mastery Over Rangers

Combined AP & UPI

ARLINGTON, Tex. — Vida Blue, despite a shaky start and a surprising home run by Vic Harris, maintains his two-year mastery over the Texas Rangers today.

The Oakland lefty won his sixth straight game over the Texas Rangers-Washington Senators franchise since he lost the presidential opener in 1971. The Athletics' 4-3 triumph Friday was their fifth in six games and lifted their record to 6-3 for a current road trip.

Blue, who pulled 18,529 fans into Arlington Stadium, was not as sharp as he so often was in his 1971 Cy Young award season, but he had enough to hold the Rangers to three hits through six innings.

Control problems developed and Blue walked five men before giving up a leadoff homer in the seventh inning to 170-pound Vice Harris — his first major league round-tripper.

That made the score 4-3, and Oakland Manager Dick Williams lifted Blue in favor of Rollie Fingers, who immediately gave up a single to Ken Suarez. Fingers then retired the last nine Rangers to record his second save.

"Vida threw a lot of pitches — over 100 in six innings," said Williams. "It was that more than the Harris homer that made me take him out."

The A's started the game as if they would repeat Thursday night's 17-2 triumph over the Rangers. Oakland scored one run in each of the first four innings, with Joe Rudi and Dick Green getting two RBI apiece.

But Don Stanhouse shut out the A's on two hits the last five innings. The 22-year-old right-hander relieved starter and loser Rich Hand, 2-2, with two outs in the third inning and a run in.

The only run Stanhouse allowed was in the fourth, when Bert Campaneris sliced a triple just inside the right field foul line and scored on Rudi's sacrifice fly. Rudi also doubled home Campaneris in the first after the Oakland shortstop opened the game with a single off Hand.

Green's RBI came in the second and third innings. He doubled home Ray Fosse after the Oakland catcher had doubled to start the second inning. In the third, Green singled home Reggie Jackson.

Before Harris' homer in the seventh, Texas could muster an offense only in the first inning.

Williams did not consider lifting Blue in the first, saying he figured his team could continue to score.

"We should have scored a lot more runs in the first. A great catch by Maddox let them off the hook," he said.

Oakland has now won three straight games and moved into third place in the American League West with a 16-14 record.

In tonight's third game of the series, John Odom (0-5) of the A's hurls against Pete Broberg (0-3) of Texas.

Russell Takes Over NBA Sonics

SEATTLE (UPI) — Bill Russell, one of best defensive centers to ever play pro basketball, returns to the sport after a four-year absence as coach and general manager of the Seattle SuperSonics.

The former superstar and coach of the Boston Celtics signed a five-year contract Friday with the Sonics of the National Basketball Association. Terms were not disclosed.

DOMINANT

Sam Schulman, president and owner of the Sonics, called Russell "the most dominant player the game has known and the finest coach in the game's history."

As a player, Russell led the Celtics to seven NBA titles and he later posted a 162-83 record as a coach while the Celtics won two more NBA championships.

REPLACEMENTS

He replaces Tom Nissalke, who was fired in January, as the coach and succeeds Bob Houbregs as general manager. Houbregs quit last week.

In recent years, Russell has been a radio and television sports commentator. He just concluded the season as commentator on ABC Television's NBA Game of the Week.

WORST SEASON

In his return to the game, Russell takes over a team which struggled through the worst season of its brief history.

The poor performance was despite the signing by Schulman of highly touted players for large sums of money. The players have failed to mold into a team that could provide Schulman with a championship.

In Los Angeles, Russell said: "I'm going to Seattle with an open mind about the players. I'll take a look at everybody and see what they can or can't do.

"I know what I'd like to have but nobody can have all they like to have. I'll have to take what I have and make the most of it."

Russell said he saw the Sonics play only once last season.

He promised to be a disciplinarian, quipping, "I'm going to take a baseball bat with me."

SARATOGA — The College of Marin doubles tennis team of Mark Rodnick and Bill Kinser was scheduled to play semi-final and hopefully final matches today in the Northern California championships at West Valley College's new facilities here, still under construction.

Kinser and Rodnick, seeded sixth whipped three opponents Thursday and yesterday after an opening-round bye, and were to face third-seeded Kurt Nielsen and Bruce Winn of the College of the Sequoias in the semis. Some 48 doubles teams were entered.

Regardless of their performance today, Rodnick and Kinser have qualified for the state tournament next Friday and Saturday at Canada College in Redwood City.

Rodnick was defeated in the third round of singles competition and the other Tar doubles qualifier, Greg Kalemba and Terry Timmons, fell in the second round.

2 HAMILTON BOXERS IN FINALS TONIGHT

BOSTON (UPI) — Two Hamilton Air Force boxers have reached the finals in the National Amateur Athletic Union boxing championships here, but neither 106-pounder Claudio (Chicky) Rivera or 156-pounder Jerome Bennett has an easy task in securing a title tonight.

Rivera decisioned John Barr Jr. of the Middle Atlantic region Friday night to earn the right to meet favored Albert Sandovak of the South Pacific Region tonight.

Sandovak knocked out Mike Britton of the Southwest at 2:59 of the first round Friday night to reach the finals. Britton was carried out on a stretcher and taken to a local hospital for observation. His condition was not considered serious.

Rivera's Hamilton colleague Bennett took a decision from John Rotondo of the Adirondack Club Friday night to quality for a title fight tonight against Dale Grant, brother of Munich Olympics' gold medalist Sugar Ray Seales.

Indy Driver Pollard Is Killed In Crash

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — Art Pollard, 46, veteran Medford, Ore., race driver, was killed today when his car crashed and burned in a practice run for the 500-mile auto race of May 28.

Pollard, a grandfather and the oldest driver entered in a race in which some observers expected 200 m.p.h. laps, was clocked at 191.4 miles per hour on the lap before his car, a Dan Gurney Eagle, smashed into a wall. Pollard hit the barrier with the right front side of his car.

His death was announced by hospital officials.

The automobile burst into flame, spun through the air and back onto the track. He was trapped in the car for a brief time.

Pollard had been a qualifier for last year's race but suffered a broken leg in a practice accident. His place in 1972 had been taken by Wally Dallenbach, who finished in 33rd and last place.

The accident came only 36 minutes after the oval track at the speedway at the speedway opened for the pre-qualification practice runs.

Pulled from the wrecked car, Pollard was taken first to the infield hospital and then to Memorial Hospital, where his death was announced. Dr. Thomas Hanna, Speedway physician, said he had suffered flame inhalation, burns of the body and a fractured right arm.

Terra Linda Wins

Undefeated right-hander Mike Bird won his seventh game yesterday, with help from Larry DelBucchi's two hits and two runs batted in, as Terra Linda High School's junior varsity baseball team improved its Marin County Athletic League record to 11-1 with a 6-3 victory over visiting Marin Catholic.

Margaret Vs. Riggs Tomorrow

RAMONA, Calif. (UPI) — Bobby Riggs is a 7-5 favorite to defeat Margaret Court Sunday in their $30,000 tennis match, a match which has caught the fancy of sportsmen the world over, possibly because they do not know what to expect. The match will be televised at 12:30 p.m. (PDT) on Channel 5.

Mrs. Court, although risking none of her own money, is risking the drive by women players to obtain higher purses. The 30-year-old mother has earned more than $80,000 playing tennis this year.

She has won 89 of her last 91 matches and has won 21 Big Four tournaments.

Can she win?

"I wouldn't go into it if I didn't think so," she said.

Riggs, at age 55, won the Wimbledon title in 1939. He is known for risking a few quid on events of this sort and he is risking a little "face" too as he claims women do not play good tennis.

Riggs originally put up $5,000, winner-take-all, in challenging the top women players. He has plugged the match from its inception, especially since CBS Television entered the picture and helped boost the purse.

Although frequently complaining about old age and poor physical condition, he confides, "I'll be very surprised if I lose."

"Look," he said, "I play regularly and sometimes I play several matches on the same day. There's no way I'm going to get tired.

"I have the shots to make her

MEXICO CITY — The United States needed a Solomon to earn a split of its first two singles matches against Mexico Friday in the Davis Cup North American Zone Finals. Baseball

REDWOOD CITY — Former New York Yankee pitching star Don Larsen, who in 1956 pitched the only perfect World Series baseball game, Friday filed a $1 million damage suit against a baseball manufacturing firm he alleges is using his name without his consent.

Larsen, of Morgan Hill, Calif., named the Tennessee-based Lannom Manufacturing Co. as defendant in the suit, filed in the San Mateo County Superior Court. The suit contends that the firm is using Larsen's autograph on its baseballs.

Track-Field

HAYWARD — Rochelle Davis of Texas Women's College and Veronica Harris of Chicago State won trial heats in the 100-yard dash in 10.7 seconds Friday at the Women's National Track and Field Championships to share the national record.

The old mark of 10.8 was set by Pat Hawkins of Long Island University in 1972.

Another national record was set in the 440 relay when a team from Texas Womens College won a heat in 46.7, breaking the old mark of 48.5 set by Alcorn A&M in 1970.

Drug Abuse Deemed 'Rampant' In Pros

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congressional investigators said Friday there is "widespread and rampant" use and abuse of drugs in professional sports and demanded lifetime bans for drug users.

The investigations subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee said, "Such drug use exists, in varying degrees, in all sports and levels of competition with few exceptions."

Chairman Harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., said the professional leagues should consider "barring for life" the drug abusers. No names or teams were mentioned in the report.

Albert J. McGrath, a member of the subcommittee staff, said the year-long study "covered a majority of the teams" in professional sports. He said a similar study soon will be initiated into amateur sports.

McGrath gave no figures but said drug use among pro athletes was "widespread and rampant at all levels."

The drugs used most, he said, are amphetamines, stimulants and anabolic steroids, taken to increase weight and strength temporarily.

"In some instances, the degree of improper drug use—primarily amphetamines and anabolic steroids—can only be described as alarming," McGrath said in a news release.

Staggers suggested that all professional teams be required to report any drug incidents to league headquarters.

"All players should be required to notify their team physician of any drugs or other medication which they are obtaining from other than team sources," he said.

"And moreover, stringent penalties for illegal use, for example, fines, suspensions or even barring for life, if warranted, should be administered. The same penalities should be applied to team physicians, trainers, coaches and other personnel involved," he said.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, Football Commissioner Pete Rozelle and a National Basketball Association official all said their leagues have long supported anti-drug programs.

"I don't think it's a serious problem in baseball," Kuhn said. "Perhaps that's because ours is not a violent sport. But we're aware that we have to keep a constant vigil as to the dangers of drug use."

"We have conducted drug seminars during spring training," Kuhn added. "We have also spent a substantial sum on a comprehensive booklet outlining the dangers of drug usage. It's been sent to all the players and officials in major and minor leagues."

Rozelle pointed out that a poster warning of the dangers of drug use is mandatory for all NFL dressing rooms while Jack Joyce, NBA secutity director, said that the moral turpitude clause in the league's constitution and by-laws gave it power to deal with drug offenders.

Providence Group Seeks ABA Tams

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — A group of Providence businessmen has collected enough money to buy the franchise of the Memphis Tams of the American Baksetball Association and has entered into negotiations with Tams' owner Charles O. Finley.

"We have raised the $1.8 million purchase price for the Tams. We have got 12 people willing to bring a professional team to Providence," said Paul Lynch, who organized efforts last year to buy the Kentucky Colonels.

"Now it's up to Finley whether we will get the team," Lynch said Friday. However, Finley, who currently is involved in a squabble with the ABA Board of Governors, has backed off slightly on the deal, and time is running short.

Lynch said there was a possibility that the team could split its home games among three New England cities, Providence, Hartford and New Haven, Conn.

Lynch said he will travel to New York Monday to talk to Robert Carlson, president of the ABA, to discuss the possibility of beginning a new franchise at Providence if the Tams deal falls through.

TIME MACHINE

An American Wins Unusual Marathon

LONDON — Since dawn this morning, huge crowds have lined the roads from Windsor Castle to the heart of London, watching the marathon runners complete their agonizing journey in these 1908 Olympic Games.

They've been running for more than three hours and only 28 of the original 75 entrants are still in the competition. The rest have dropped out due to exhaustion.

The end is near. After 26 grueling miles, in a race that has seen many leaders, one man is now running within sight of the stadium.

Italian, Pietri Dorando has held up best among the survivors. He's leading American Johnny Hayes by almost half a minute as he enters the stadium. There is only one lap around the track separating Dorando from an olympic gold medal.

Dorando is in the stadium, but he's dazed and confused. He appears to be barely conscious and is staggering the wrong direction around the track. His body has been pushed beyond the limits of endurance.

In the bedlam, some officials have helped him to his feet and are prodding and half carrying him towards the finish line. He courageously struggles the few remaining yards and is first across the line.

Pietri Dorando's ordeal is over, but he is not the winner of this race. He is disqualified for getting aid from the officials and 20 year old Johnny Hayes is the inheritor of a gold medal for winning the most dramatic marathon race in olympic history.

Rancho Clinches Tie For 3rd Title

Rancho Cotate High School of Rohnert Park clinched a tie for its third consecutive Sonoma County League baseball championship yesterday by drubbing host Healdsburg, 7-3, while rival Analy of Sebastopol was suffering a 4-3 loss to El Molino of Forestville.

Rancho improved its league mark to 8-2 with two games left next week, while Analy dipped to 6-4.

In other games yesterday, Tomales captured its first North Central League II championship since 1967 despite a 5-3 loss to Upper Lake, as chief rival St. Vincent of Petaluma lost an eight-inning, 12-4 donnybrook to Kelseyville. Petaluma was beaten by Hogan of Vallejo in a North Bay League clash, 10-9.

Dave Hubley went two for three and drove in two runs for Rancho. The game was put out of reach with a three-run rally in the third inning when Marshall Brant, Rick Butler and Dan Hubley all smacked doubles, the latter two back-to-back.

Tomales wound up its campaign with a 7-3 league record and 13-5 overall mark. "We jelled out much better than I thought," said coach Jim Clahan.

The Braves fell behind Upper Lake yesterday, 5-0, but rallied for three runs in the sixth inning on a two-run double by Andy Bordessa and run-scoring single by Mike Camp. It wasn't enough, however.

St. Vincent freshman Ray Cerna hit a two-out, two-run single in the bottom of the seventh to cap a three-run rally and send the Mustangs into extra innings against Kelseyville, but the visitors scored eight unearned runs after two were out in the eighth to win.

Big hit for Kelseyville was a three-run double by Doug Johns which bounced off the third base bag and caromed away. Despite the loss, St. Vincent finished second to Tomales in the NCL II at 6-4 and had a season log of 13-8 with a team which had only three seniors.

Pele In Oakland Coliseum June 1

It was announced Thursday that Pele's Santos soccer team will meet Club Deportivo Guadalajara of Mexico in the international exhibition.

Throughout his career, which began at 15 when he was discovered playing soccer barefoot in a remote Brazilian village, Pele has scored over 1,300 goals—more than any other player in history. His skills earn him an income in the $2 million a year range.

Brodie, Pirtle Lead In Golf

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — San Francisco 49ers quarterback John Brodie, who once was a pro golfer for a year, and his partner from Menlo Park, Calif., Skit Pirtle, shot a four under par 68 at tough Spyglass Hill Friday for the lead in the Northern California Golf Association four-ball championship.

The two didn't make a single bogey all the way around the Robert Trent Jones designed course, which usually is the toughest of the three played in the annual Crosby National Pro-Am. Brodie had birdies on the 11th and 12th holes while Pirtle had a bird on the 13th and holed a 220-yard three-wood for an eagle two on the 16th, the first time that has been done at Spyglass Hill.

Texas Golf Relaxing For Bruce

FORT WORTH, Tex. (UPI) — Playing golf in Texas is relaxing for Bruce Crampton since he is always near what he considers his second home.

The native Australian maintains a pleasant residence in the northern part of Dallas, and if it is all right with the Professional Golfers Association officials, Crampton has a suggestion.

"I'd like to play all the tournaments in Texas," Crampton said Friday. And the reason has become very obvious in the past three weeks.

Since the golf tour has hit the state, Crampton has had only one round over par. He finished fourth in the Byron Nelson Classic in Dallas and won last week's Houston Open.

And going into today's third round of the $150,000 Colonial National Invitation Crampton owns a two-stroke lead over Tom Weiskopf.

Crampton's streak of gold could have been dented Friday, but he survived a shaky start to put together a one-under-par in searing weather over the demanding Colonial Country Club course and that was good for a two round total of fiveunder 135.

Weiskopf added a 68 to his opening round of 69 for his 36-hole 137. One stroke back came defending champion Herry Heard, Lou Graham and Lee Elder. Hale Irwin, Gene Littler and Ken Still were the only other golfers below par, each at one-under 139.

Lee Trevino, who came to this tournament with a continuation of his shoulder problems, slid to a 73 and was at 144. Napa's Ron Cerrudo made the cut with a 148.

run. If stamina becomes a factor, it should be in my favor."

The slightly-built Riggs rarely rushes the net and has little power, relying on placements for his points.

Mrs. Court, nearly six feet tall, has great coordination, good power and a reach which makes her difficult to pass at the net.

Asked about Riggs' reputation for incessant chatter and use of every gimmick in the book, she replied, "I can't say I'm losing any sleep at the thought of meeting him. I've no particular plan in mind. I'll just play my own game."

It should be a fun affair with no hard feelings. Riggs and Mrs. Court are expected to team against Tony Trabert and Karen Hantze Susman in a doubles match following the main event.

Proceeds go to the Diabetes Association. The only other potential losers would be CBS and the promoters in case of rain.

Petaluma's Martinez In Track Victory

SANTA ROSA — Jose Martinez was the lone varsity individual winner for Petaluma High School yesterday in the North Bay League track and field finals, capturing the 220-yard dash in 22.2.

Jon Sisler finished second in the mile and two-mile, Larry David grabbed a third and a fourth in the two hurdle events and Martinez was second in the 440 as the Trojans racked up 41 points to place third behind Montgomery of Santa Rosa (77) and Vallejo (57).

Astros' Wilson Throws A Party

By U. P. INTERNATIONAL

Don Wilson sure knows how to throw a "welcome home" party.

Wilson, the top righthander on the Houston Astros' staff, celebrated manager Leo Durocher's return Friday night by stopping Cincinnati on three hits as the Astros scored a 5-1 victory and moved two games ahead of the Reds in the battle for second place in the National League West.

Durocher had been absent from his job since April 20 when he was hospitalized with an intestinal infection. During his absence the team was managed by Preston Gomez and compiled a 13-3 record.

Friday night's game marked the third super performance for Wilson in his last five starts. Wilson, normally a slow starter, two-hit San Diego on April 21 then after two mediocre starts hurled a four-hitter against New York on May 5.

Wilson, now 3-3, credits his good start to an increase in weight. He reported to spring training this year at 235, 10 pounds heavier than in past years. When the Astros broke camp Wilson weighed 223, which was seven pounds heavier than he was a year ago.

"I feel stronger than I have in four seasons," said Wilson.

Wilson, who has hurled two no-hitters in his career, pitched no-hit ball for five innings before Joe Morgan broke the spell with a ground-rule double as the leadoff batter in the sixth. Morgan eventually scored on a single by Johnny Bench to spoil Wilson's shutout bid.

Lee May provided Wilson with all the offensive support he needed when he hit a tworun homer in the second inning. Cesar Cedeno also drove in two runs with a pair of singles.

In other NL games, New York edged Pittsburgh 4-3, St. Louis blanked Montreal 12-0, Los Angeles defeated San Francisco 3-2 and Chicago nipped Philadelphia 4-3. San Diego at Atlanta was rained out.

Baltimore shut out New York 3-0, Boston topped Cleveland 4-2, Kansas City beat Minnesota 6-2, Detroit edged Milwaukee 6-5, Oakland nipped Texas 4-3, and Chicago topped California 7-4 in American League action.

The Mets took over second place in the NL East with their victory over the Pirates but the triumph proved costly as catcher Jerry Grote was lost to the club for at least six weeks with a broken arm. It was another in a long line of injuries that have hit the Mets so far this season.

Grote suffered the injury when he was struck with a pitch thrown by reliever Ramon Hernandez in the seventh inning. Mets' outfielder Rusty Staub also was hit on the hand by Hernandez in the same inning but x-rays proved negative. Staub missed most of last season with a broken hand suffered when he was hit by a pitch.

The two hit batsmen were instrumental in the Mets' pushing across what proved to be the winning run in the seventh. Bud Harrelson got the run home when he drew a bases-loaded walk. Tug McGraw preserved the victory for Harry Parker, now 3-0, with 2 2-3 innings of hitless relief. Al Oliver had a homer for the Pirates.

Alan Foster pitched a fourhitter and his teammates backed him with 15 hits as the Cardinals routed the Expos. Foster allowed only one hit over the final seven innings to win his first game of the year. Mike Tyson paced the Cards' attack with three hits and two runs batted in.

Randy Hundley drove in two runs with a double and a homer to spark the Cubs' triumph over the Phillies. Chicago's Glenn Beckert stretched his hitting streak to 20 games with a single in the second inning.

Marin Supply Wins On McBain's Homers

Buz McBain's second home run of the game, a two-run shot in the final inning, gave Marin Supply an 11-10 victory over Kentucky Fried Chicken last night in a San Rafael Recreation Department adult softball league game at Albert Field.

Fred Pheiffer hit a grand slam earlier for Marin Supply. In other games, Jim Schmidt drove in three runs with three hits, including a two-run homer, in MacArthur's 5-2 victory over Hobbit's Habit, and Escrow hit six straight singles in a six-run sixth inning en route to a 9-4 triumph over Les Elite.

Crealy Vs. Mayer In Net Match

PORTOLA VALLEY, Calif. (UPI) — Dick Crealy of Australia and defending champion Sandy Mayer of Stanford clash in today's semifinals of the $10,000 73rd annual California State Tennis Championships as expected, but the other match is the surprise.

Tom Leonard of Arcadia Calif. upset Jeff Borowiak of Berkeley, Calif., 7-5, 6-7, 6-3 for his third consecutive tough three-set win Friday. He'll meet Ray Moore of South Africa, who downed Richard Russell 6-3, 6-2.

Crealy, the top seed, took Tom Edlefsen 6-4, 4-6, 6-3 in another tough match and Mayer downed Dick Bohrnstedt 6-4, 7-6.

Borowiak, who had service problems all day, also was upset in the doubles when he and Haroon Rahim, his former UCLA teammate from Bakistan, lost to Dick Dell of Maryland and Sherwood Stewart of Dallas, 6-4, 6-4. The Borowiak-Rahim combo was top-seeded.

In other doubles competition Friday, Edlefsen and Leonard beat Barry MacKay (of Ross) and Alex Olmedo, 6-3, 6-2.

The woman's singles also lost its top seed when Barbara Downs of Alamo had to withdraw because of a throat infection.

WEEK IN BUSINESS

The Investor's Confidence Hit

Losses were general throughout the list; losers outnumbered gainers, 1,188 to 583, among 1,974 issues traded.

Turnover dwindled to 68,787,053 shares from 81,851,372 the week before, and 71,942,040 a year earlier.

The technical rally of the previous week spilled over into the first two trading days, but market strength deteriorated Wednesday on news the Organization of Petroleum Countries' talks with western oil producers had broken down.

The prospect of extensive fuel rationing began to make itself felt on parts of the list, particularly the weakening airlines, and the oils themselves. Airline executives began talking about slower flying speeds in order to conserve increasingly tight fuel supplies.

Oil stocks also smarted from a report the Federal Trade Commission was stepping up its investigation of the industry's competitive practices, with an eye toward possible antitrust action. On the plus side, the Cost of Living Council said it might ease some of the pricing restrictions placed on oil products. Mobil Oil Chairman Rawleigh warner Jr., called such

Brokers called the jump Thursday in the Federal Reserve's discount rate "unpleasant" for the stock market. They laid much of the blame for Friday's sharp decline on that single happening. The rise in the interest rate charged the Federal Reserve's member banks was the fourth in a row, and brought the discount rate to its highest level since the so-called "credit crunch" of 1969-1970.

Newton Zinder of E.F. Hutton said the move by the Fed provoked whisperings of a repeat of the tight-money period three years ago. More immediately, it raised the prospect of a new increase beyond the present 7 per cent in the prime lending rate that banks offer their most favored customers.

American Airlines was the most active, off 3 ¼ to 14 ¾ on 843,300 shares. Suave Shoe was second, falling more than half—4 ⅝ to 4 ⅜—on 820,500 shares. The company reported sharply lower earnings for the current quarter. Mobil Oil followed, off 6 ¾ to 64 on 734,100 shares.

Southern California: Blighted Paradise

AFTER OUR LONG, wet, cold winter, an auto trip to Southern California and return is refreshing.

Wildflowers abound; hills are green even into early May. Some hillsides in Southern California which become green only once every few years are holding their color late this year, and some even boast carpets of wildflowers, a most rare occurrence.

Lupines are profuse. Mustard has not seemed so high nor so brilliant in years. Ceanothus abounds in three colors which probably are actually three shades of blue — near white, bluish gray, and blue-blue.

California poppies seem more abundant than ever, although they seem pale this year, apparently not achieving their usual bright orange.

Flying insects also are more abundant than ever. An hour's driving at freeway speed will produce enough bug spots on your windshield to impair your view of the road ahead.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA auto traffic is as horrendous as ever. Almost any place within 50 miles of downtown Los Angeles is a nightmare at commute hour. Unless the weather is just right, smog is as bad as ever, or worse. In some places it is downright dangerous.

Riverside gets it worse than downtown Los Angeles because prevailing westerly winds blow the stuff from Los Angeles and Orange counties through a couple of gaps in the hills to Riverside.

In 1948, noxious coal fumes coagulated to suffocate 22 persons in Donora, Pa. Polluted "black fog" killed 4,703 in London in 1952.

Some smog experts fear that Riverside may be the site of the world's next great smog disaster.

THE U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has threatened gasoline rationing in the Los Angeles area as a means of bringing hydrocarbon emission under control.

The Los Angeles Rapid Transit District offers discount prices on monthly bus tickets and promotes use of the bus system in place of a second car. Some private companies and some city, state and federal offices are urging employees to pool rides to work.

Some years ago Los Angeles voters turned down a bond issue to build a rapid transit monorail system. There are indications that a ballot measure authorizing funds for rail transit would stand a much better chance of passage now.

A voluntary organization called Clean Air Constituency has suggested a "driving boycott" which would see voluntary elimination of non-essential automobile use.

Los Angeles metropolitan area now has a network of 800 miles of freeways, built at a cost of $3 billion. Another 750 miles are planned or proposed. But many may never be built. There is growing opposition as the feeling grows that freeways may not be the answer to Southern California's traffic problems.

WHEN THE WEATHER is just right and there is little or no smog, Southern California reminds you of what it was like a generation ago. The sun shines brightly. The blue sky is accented by fleecy white clouds. The San Gabriel mountains rise unbelievably high and close. Mid-day is hot but an afternoon sea breeze makes perfect shirt-sleeve weather. Evenings invite barbecuing and eating out of doors, in shirt sleeves. Yet the night is cool enough for sound sleeping.

It is well nigh perfect, a paradise.

Unfortunately, such weather lasts only a day or two. The overpowering smog is back; it is humid and irritating. The noise, heat and fumes of the traffic are overpowering.

In a sense, Southern California is a microcosm where man can see clearly what he has done to foul his own nest.

Somehow, we must reverse this process so that in the next generation skies will grow clearer and the air purer.

Recycling Ones Own Paper

Carl Jung, the founder of Jungian analysis, was quite poor in his youth. Even in his old age he remained quite thrifty. He received much mail as he became famous. The backs of the letters and envelopes he received became his note paper and memo pad.

In a sense, he was recycling paper. It's an old journalistic tradition to take notes on the back of envelopes, feeling that such informality put the interviewee more at ease. We find the backs of envelopes handy for shopping lists and reminders to ourself. It makes us more tolerant of our junk mail.

Bouquets And Brickbats

BOUQUETS To Roberta Shockey, Anne L. Tracy, and Barbara Menzies for the "best and last" Stinson Beach Wildflower Show. These women have kept the show going for many years. Is there no one else to pick up where they left off?

BOUQUETS to the 16 young athletes honored by radio KTIM as outstanding athletes of the year in Marin County high schools.

BRICKBATS to members of the San Rafael City Council for raising their own pay 5 per cent, retroactive to 1970. Retroactive pay raises constitute a questionable practice at best. One like this is a scandal, even though the amount involved is not large.

BOUQUETS to Marin County Supervisors Gary T. Giacomini and Michael Wornum for voting AGAINST creation of the county's conglomerate public health-mental health-coroner-public administrator-medical-welfare-probation department.

BOUQUET to the Independent Insurance Agents Association of Marin for providing a $5,000 fund to make short-term loans to needy College of Marin students.

Child Care Session Seen As Important

Last Saturday, May 5, more than 100 people met at the College of Marin for Child Care Awareness Day. There were speakers on state and federal law changes which affect day care centers. There were also speaker-representatives from the County Child Care Planning and Advisory Committee and the Concerned Citizens for Child Care. The main speaker for the day was Willie Brown, chairman of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee. After hearing the speakers, the audience broke up into workshops on the single parent, CCCPAC, and parental stress, among others.

We were disappointed that the Independent-Journal did not send a press representative, despite an invitation. This day proved that child care has become an important issue in the county. . .

'Planning' Destroys Back Yard Privacy

Your feature article in the magazine section of the April 28 issue relative to homes fitting the natural contour of the land instead of the massive bulldoze approach of making the land fit the homes was great.

The need for this practical approach with consideration for the existing homes is vital, and articles like yours do a real service to the community.

The opposite of this theory, I regret to report, is a fact for all of us on the periphery of the Quail Hill development where, up to this point, the home owners and/or contractors are building big homes overlooking the existing one-story Eichlers which, as you know, are only 10-15 feet in height.

The new two-story home, a bare 10 feet behind our fence, has a series of windows, plus a decked porch, looking down into our entire back yard. The six trees planted as a barrier behind our fence, part of the overall plan approved prior to any building, have all been removed. Five of these three-year-old trees were replanted on the opposite side of the new home and the one lone tree that was left was mangled when the cement trucks laid in their steel troughs. This tree departed in the next load of trash.

The San Rafael Planning Department people have been sympathetic to our plight, but explain the plans for these homes were approved prior to April 5, a date that apparently signaled some new ground rules in construction, and there is nothing they can do for us at this time.

We never doubted that homes would be built on Quail Hill, and we further have no doubt there is nothing we can do except bring the situation to your attention in hopes it isn't repeated in the future.

This is planning?

Even male chauvinists have to admit that gals surpass guys in many types of endeavor — like motherhood.

That's what Mother's Day is all about.

On Mother's Day a man's place is in the home, messing up mom's kitchen in order to serve her breakfast in bed.

You never hear a bridegroom threatening to go home to father, do you?

Think of all the time Whistler's mother has been sitting in that rocking chair — waiting for Whistler's father to get home from the pub.

The Line Forms On The Right To Leak Watergate Secrets

WASHINGTON — The reason why the Watergate case has broken open is that everyone involved is leaking to the press to save their own skins.

I work in a building on Pennsylvania Avenue which also includes the offices of the Boston Globe, Newsweek magazine, Newhouse Newspapers, the Dallas Times Herald, the Kansas City Star and the Chicago Tribune.

The other morning when I arrived there was a long line outside the building composed of people implicated in the Watergate affair. The line ran around the block.

A POLICEMAN stopped me at the door and said, "Get in the back of the line, Mac, like everybody else. Some of these people have been waiting all night to tell their stories to the press."

"I'm not a suspect in the Watergate case, officer, I'm a newspaperman going up to my office."

Some people in the line heard me and tried to shove documents at me.

"Let's have none of that," the cop said to the crowd. "You can show him your documents when you get inside."

ONE MAN, a former White House aide, shouted, "I can tell you the whole story on the Ellsberg break-in."

Another man said, "He doesn't know anything. I've got Ellsberg's psychiatrist's couch hidden in my home."

Someone down the line said, "Don't listen to him. I have a blockbuster of a story. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy wrote Clifford Irving's book about Howard Hughes."

Someone else yelled, "I have the names of everyone who contributed a million dollars to the Committee for the Re-Election of the President. Give me a break. I've been waiting since 6 o'clock last night to leak it."

"I'M SORRY," I said to the man, "but I don't write that kind of story. Why don't you leak it to Jack Anderson?".

"You can't get near his office," the man said. "I waited two days to leak it to him and I never got closer than a block away."

The police officer said to me, "I wish you wouldn't stand out here, sir. These people are desperate and I don't want a riot."

A man slipped me $5,000 in new $100 bills. "Take me upstairs with you to Newsweek's office and I'll give you another $5,000."

The offer was tempting, but I gave the man his money back. I said, "It would be unfair to the other suspects in line. I'm sure you'll all get in to leak your stories."

"That's what they told me at the Washington Post. But when I got up to the head of the line they said they didn't need any more on the Watergate bugging. They had enough leaks on that."

"I CAN'T UNDERSTAND why all you people are so desperate to talk to the press," I said to several of the people, all former White House aides.

"You dummy!" one of them shouted. "If we implicate others then we can get immunity from prosecution."

"Why should we be the scapegoats?" another man shouted. "We want to get the guys who put us up to this."

"If we get our stories in print," a third said, "then the public will know we were just little fish in a big stagnant pool."

"I'll go upstairs," I said.

The policeman opened the glass door and the crowd pushed forward, waving their incriminating evidence.

He shouted, "All right, you people stop shoving or I'll make you go to the back of the line."

Washington Upheaval Strains New Relations With Red China

PEKING — President Nixon's finest hour was when he came to Peking in February, 1972, to end 20 years of isolation from the world's most populous nation.

A spectacular performance on television, it was meant not as an end in itself but as the first step in a renewal of the close relationship that had once existed. In short, it was a new turn in the long love affair between the United States and China.

That is important to recall in light of the disaster to the Nixon administration. For the Chinese, in receiving the President and reversing the propaganda so long targeted on the wicked imperialist, put a far greater stake on the ultimate outcome than did the United States.

MY WIFE AND I had been in China for 36 hours before we learned of the President's dramatic appeal to the nation and the housecleaning of top officials. Then we got the news from a fellow American who had still been in Hong Kong when the story broke. Not a word in any Chinese newspaper or on the state radio; it was a striking commentary on the difference between the two social orders.

At the very top, to be sure, the full text of the President's address came by shortwave shortly after it was delivered. Excerpts from the address and a report of the events of that dramatic night were contained in a private semi-official letter going out to the cadres in the provincial capitals throughout the country. This would have a circulation of something more than five million. Add another several million with transistor radios capable of picking up short-wave broadcasts on BBC or the Voice of America, and the total would be perhaps one per cent of the 800 million Chinese.

For that one per cent the future of an administration in Washington with three and a half years still in office is supremely important. This not alone for the mutual benefits that can flow between the two countries, but for the peace of the entire world.

The Nixon-Kissinger structure of peace is three-cornered. China, the United States and the Soviet Union are in relationship of tension eased by common compromise. The American weight in this three-cornered structure is essential in view of the deep-seated hostility between the People's Republic and the Soviet Union. Without that weight the structure of peace would be jeopardized, if indeed it would not fall.

THE NIXON PROMISE of a generation of peace is in question. The credibility of the government in Washington is essential to carry through the great undertaking in foreign policy that was the achievement of the first four Nixon years. To lose this in a prolonged and venomous domestic quarrel would be the ultimate tragedy.

Fortunately, there is ongoing movement. The arrival of David K. E. Bruce, America's most distinguished diplomat, next week to open a liaison mission will mark the beginning of a new phase in the rebuilding of confidence between the two powers.

Peking, in turn, is sending its No. 1 diplomat, Huang Chang, until recently ambassador to France, to Washington. A delegation of Chinese journalists will shortly go to the United States. They will be accompanied by officials of the information division of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and presumably their impressions will be recorded in the carefully controlled official press.

Trade negotiations between Washington and Peking are very much to the fore. The visitor arriving in the immediate aftermath of the Watergate upheaval is invariably asked what effect it will have on American policy. Will the United States now go isolationist?

These questions are understandable in a country where the cultural revolution produced a trauma accentuated by the overthrow of Mao Tse-tung's heir apparent, Lin Piao, and the "unmasking" of the traitorous Liu Shao-chih. The Chinese have endured so much of shock and upheaval that they can hardly be surprised that disasters occur even in the seat of government of one of the superpowers.

Watergate Shows Weakness Of Concentration Of Power

The Watergate affair is having an interesting side effect on people whose business it is to think about better ways of organizing the machinery of government in Washington. Does the present "staff system" really work as well as the old "cabinet system"?

Richard Nixon is the first President to go all the way over to a full "staff system." True, a partial beginning toward it was made in the Eisenhower administration. And policymaking was centered in the White House to a considerable extent under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. But in all those three presidencies, much still remained of the old cabinet system. Cabinet officers like John Foster Dulles, Charles E. Wilson, George Humphrey, and Herbert Brownell were important policymakers for President Eisenhower. Dean Rusk, Douglas Dillon, and Robert McNamara were equally important under President Kennedy. Clark Clifford took over Defense late in the Johnson era and turned President Johnson's war policy right around. Policy often originated in cabinet offices.

HIGH POLICY in the Nixon administration originates only in the White House. Cabinet officers who thought otherwise — Walter Hickel, George Romney — have long since left. Nelson Rockefeller might have come into the second Nixon administration. He declined the opportunity. It is no path to an independent political career under the present staff system.

But how well is it working? It worked beautifully when everything was going smoothly for Mr. Nixon. Since he originated policy, and was seen to be the originator, he became the beneficiary. The State Department got none of the political advantage of the new China policy or the easing of relations between Washington and Moscow. It all went to President Nixon himself — through the channel of Henry Kissinger.

There is no reason why it shouldn't work to the entire satisfaction of the President so long as the policies shaped in the White House offices by his own staff assistants, advisers, and counselors turn out to be successful policies. But now they aren't all successful. Inflation is loose again, and Mr. Nixon can't divert himself of responsibility by firing a secretary of the treasury. Phase 3 was his own doing, by his own personal staff. He is stuck with the less-than-satisfactory state of his economic policies.

WATERGATE IS PROVIDING a classic example of the liabilities of the system. Wrongdoing is laid right at the door of White House offices. Messrs. Hunt and Liddy did their burgling and eavesdropping on White House orders and were paid, at least some of the time, from funds kept in White House safes.

Looking ahead, what happens if Mr. Nixon's foreign policies should falter? They are his policies. They cannot be repudiated by changing secretaries of state.

Could Mr. Nixon at this stage of things go back to a cabinet system? Could he attract back in his service men of independent stature like Walter Hickel or George Romney? Who with a political future in mind would want any cabinet post now? Mel Laird has just left the cabinet, and would not dream of taking a staff job.

ONE ARGUMENT for the staff system is that only the White House can override a cabinet officer of great political power in his own right. Another is that in these modern times a country as big and difficult to manage as the United States can only be governed by the single authority of a powerful White House. Otherwise, say some of the experts, there will be conflicting policies, confusion, and inefficiency.

But a cabinet officer whose policies fail can be changed without serious difficulty. It has always been done under the cabinet system. Nikita Khrushchev used the staff system and look what happened to him when his policies failed.

It seems to be a reasonable probability that the move to the staff system has gone too far and that the pendulum will swing back to some halfway point in the next administration. It would be extremely difficult for Mr. Nixon to go back now. But his sucessor, pondering the lessons of Watergate, will probably want less, not more, responsibility centered in the White House itself.

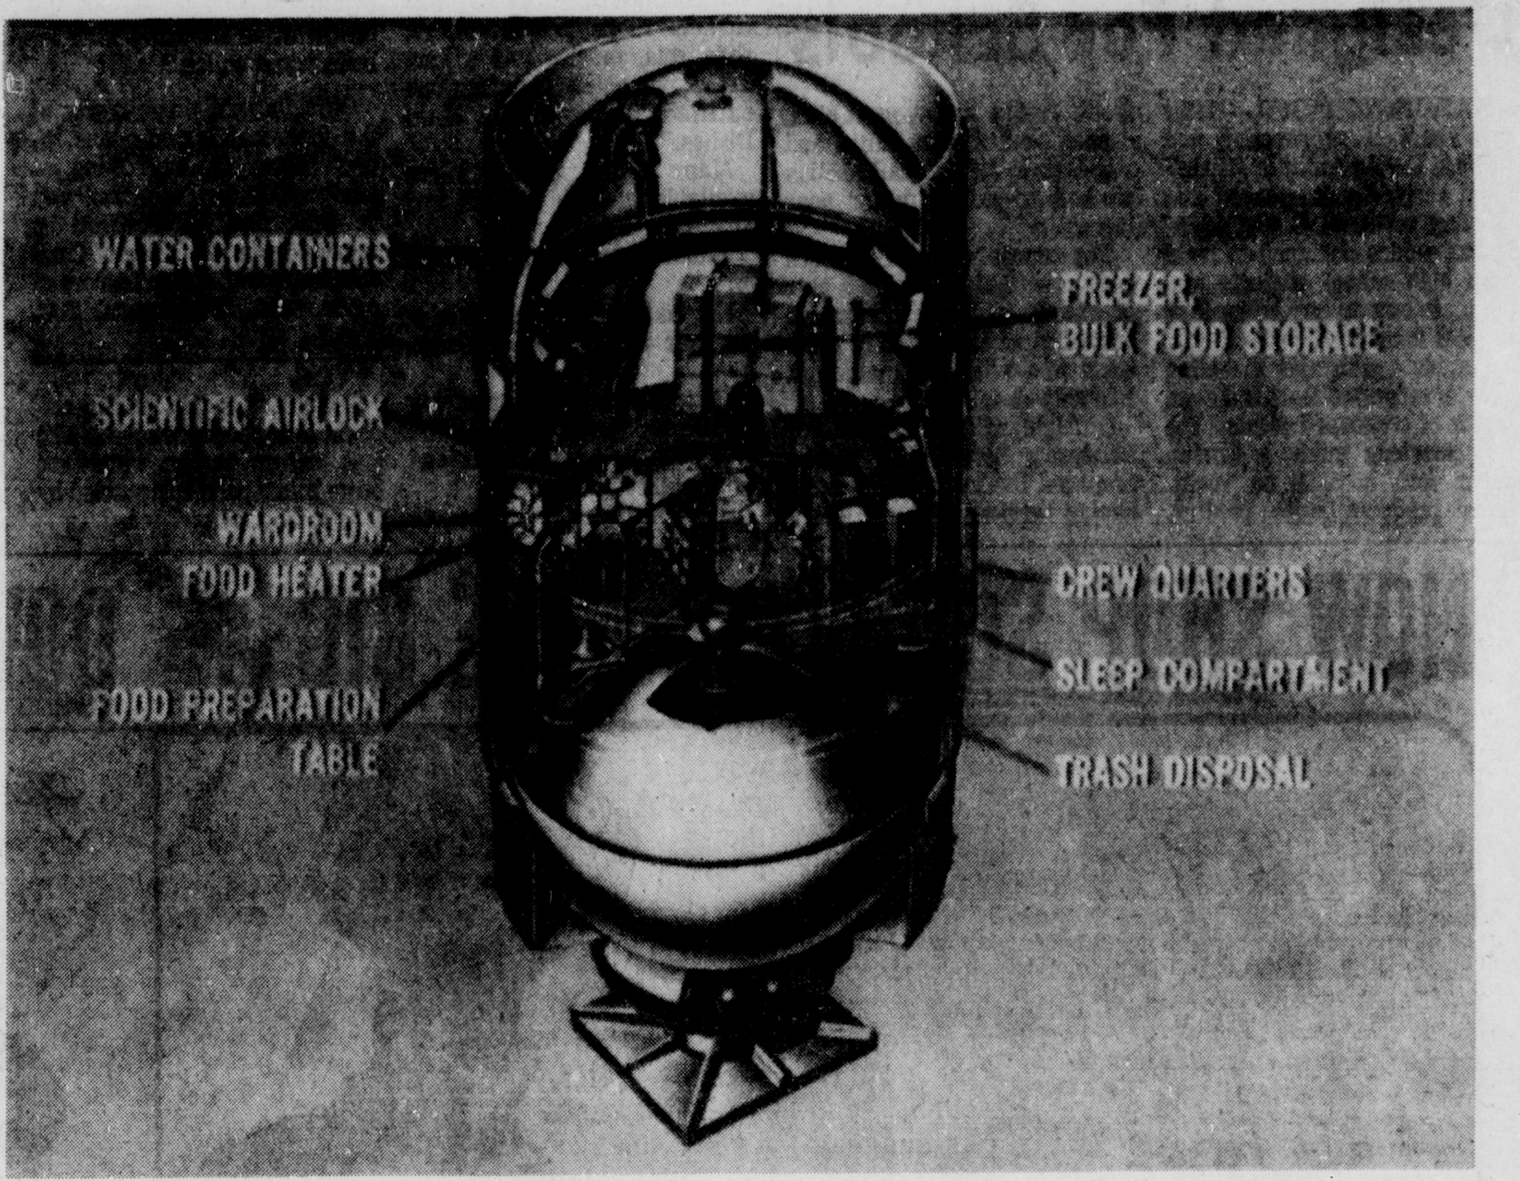
Skylab Is Envisioned As U.S. Bridge To The Future



THE SKYLAB — Take a three-bedroom apartment and a multipurpose laboratory, put them inside a huge rocket fuel tank, add an observatory and provisions for three men for 20 weeks and you have America's soon-to-be-launched Skylab space station.

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) — Take a three bedroom apartment and a multipurpose laboratory, put them inside a huge rocket fuel tank, add an observatory and provisions for three men for 20 weeks and you have America's soon - to - be - launched Skylab space station.

Skylab is by far the largest spaceship ever built. It is one of a kind, a $2.5 billion effort to build on 11 years of earth orbital and moonflight experience and put space technology to work for man on Earth.

The 168,578-pound assembly, fashioned out of a Saturn rocket stage, is set for launch into orbit around Earth at 10:30 a.m. (PST) Monday, to open America's fourth man-in-space project.

Skylab over the next eight months will house three crews of three men each. The first three astronauts will stay up a record 28 days and the next two crews each will occupy the orbiting lab 56 days, and possibly longer on the final mission.

The current space endurance record is held by three Soyuz 11 Soviet cosmonauts who died because of a hatch leak after nearly 24 days in orbit two years ago.

The two-level Skylab is much larger than the Salyut that the cosmonauts occupied, and the American lab is more like a ship than a spacecraft. It has three little bedrooms, a ward room complete with freezers, and food heaters, a bathroom, a well-equipped medical area and barn-like work areas.

Skylab will be launched with stores for 420 man days of spaceflight. There are more than 20,000 items on the inventory, including 2,100 pounds of canned, frozen and dried food, 1,200 aspirin, 199 T-shirts, four decks of playing cards, 150 rolls of teleprinter paper and 60 pounds of tools.

The food will be better than Americans have ever had in space. Included on the manu are such favorites as filet mignon, lobster Newburg, roast beef, spaghetti and even strawberries and ice cream.

Veteran moon pilot Charles (Pete) Conrad, 42, Dr. Josep P. Kerwin, 41-year-old physician, and Paul J. Weitz, 40, an aeronautical engineer, will visit Skylab first. They are scheduled to take off at 10 a.m. Tuesday a day after the lab is launched, and fly a modified Apollo command ship to a rendezvous and hookup with Skylab 7 hours and 40 minutes later.

The Apollo will serve as a ferry for Skylab. The commandship, almost identical to those that shuttled men to and from the moon, will remain docked to Skylab for 28 days. Then Conrad, Kerwin and Weitz will return to earth in the Apollo, leaving Skylab in orbit to be visited by the next crew two months later.

Alan L. Bean, who flew to the moon with Conrad on Apollo 12, will command the second Skylab mission, set to start Aug. 8. He will be accompanied by Dr. Owen K. Garriott, an electrical engineer, and Jack R. Lousma, an aeronautical engineer.

The third crew, to be launched Nov. 9 to spend 56 days in orbit, will be commanded by Gerald P. Carr, an aeronautical engineer who has not yet flown in space. His crewmen also are both rookies — Dr. Edward G. Gibson, a physicist, and William R. Pogue, who has a master's degree in mathematics.

Skylab will circle earth at five miles a second in a 270-mile high orbit canted 50 degrees to the Equator. That path will take it farther north and south, 3,450 miles in each direction, than any American manned spaceship and will come very close to the tracks followed by Soviet manned spaceships.

During its eight months of service, Skylab will crisscross every section of the United States and 75 per cent of the world's surface. The space station is so big, 118 feet long and 90 feet wide, that at sunrise and sunset it will resemble a large star streaking southeast or northeast.

The object of the Skylab project is to see if man can withstand the peculiarities of weightless space for long periods and to experiment with a broad variety of practical applications to see what he can do in orbit that he can't on Earth.

The nine Skylab astronauts will conduct a total of 89 experiments in such diverse fields as solar astronomy, earth resources surveying and materials processing as well as medicine.

"We believe that there is only one way to learn about man's capabilities in space, and that is to let him live and work in space on real tasks, on tasks that are of first importance to him and his colleagues back on Earth," said associate NASA administrator George M. Low.

"Skylab is a bridge to the future," said program director William C. Schneider.

It is the first step toward large, semipermanent space stations that NASA expects someday will house dozens of scientists and engineers, perhaps of different nationalities, for months at a time. Such orbiting platforms will be serviced by winged shuttle ships, like ferry boats supply islands at sea.

The space planners envision such manmade islands in space to exploit the uniqueness of space for a wide variety of applications and eventually to serve as way stations for flights to the moon and planets.

Among the jobs foreseen now for space stations are manufacturing plants for goods that can't be made in earth's gravity - such as perfect ball bearings, foam steel and some vaccines. Planners also expect such manned oribiting platforms to serve as astronomical observatories, weather watching stations, research labs and the like.

But before such dreams can be made a reality, scientists must prove that man can live in weightless space for long periods without harmful physiological effects.

"I think it's important for us to realize that we have real questions about the limitations of man," said Dr. Charles A. Berry, NASA's chief of life sciences.

Berry has watched U.S. astronauts increase their exposure to the lack of gravity from five minutes to 14 days without serious difficulty and he personally doesn't agree with most of the doubts that have been raised in this country and abroad. But he said "We do have some serious questions and we need data to prove it."

Seventeen different medical experiments will be conducted aboard Skylab during the 20 weeks it is manned, to monitor its pilots and see how their bodies are affected by weightlessness. The space station is equipped as well as - or better than - a general practitioner's office on Earth and doctors on the ground will be able to watch the astronauts' condition daily.

There are two particularly important pieces of medical gear aboard Skylab. One is a cylindrical chamber that simulates the effects of gravity on the body's circulatory system by reducing the oxygen pressure on the lower part of the body. The effect is the same as it is on Earth when one suddenly stands after a period of rest.

The other is a bicycle exerciser and associated electronic equipment to measure a crewman's heart rate and oxygen consumption for a given amount of work. Kerwin said the bicycle will let doctors see how well men can work, peddling the stationary bike, after living in weightless space at different intervals.

"If he quits early, is it because his legs got too tired? That's a mechanical problem most likely because it's harder to ride a bike up there than it is on the ground," Kerwin said in an interview. "Or does he quit because he's exhausted, with a high heart rate and a high blood pressure? That's a different story. You really have to think about that."

EQUIPMENT — The sleeping bag made of soft flannel-like material and hung vertically on a wall (left) and the bicycle-type exerciser are among conveniences offered Skylab astronauts who are scheduled to orbit the earth for eight months. These pictures — released by NASA — were taken aboard a mockup of the Saturn workshop. (UPI Telephotos)

Kerwin said his biggest concern was not the heart, but the loss of calcium that apparently occurs for some reason when the body is exposed to the lack of gravity. A similar loss of bone material is seen in patients on Earth who spend long periods in bed.

"I wonder about the bones," Kerwin said. "I cannot make a valid argument to myself why the bones should not continue losing calcium for quite a long period of time." Doctors fear that a steady calcium loss for many months would weaken bones to the extent that they might eventually break under strains they normally could withstand.

Besides proving that men can work safely in space for weeks and months at a time, the Skylab astronauts plan to see just what men in space can do that men on Earth cannot.

There are three general types of experiments aboard the orbiting lab. One set will use a battery of telescopes to study the sun. Another group will use different sensors to gaze at Earth and survey its natural resources and a third group will try out different ways to process materials in the unique weightless environment.

"There are many things that can be done from space to help everybody, besides just gaining knowledge," Conrad said. "Some day we should be routinely using space as we use the air today to fly airplanes and get people around and do various things."

Skylab's solar studies are primarily basic research, but they may even have a practical payoff. Some of the solar phenomena physicists are most interested in are the occasional great outbursts of radiation that affect Earth's weather, disrupt radio communications and sometimes even result in electromagnetic disturbances that cause power blackouts.

Other sensors aboard Skylab will be looking at the Earth, photographing selected regions across the United States and in other countries to tell scientists more about Earth's resources and to monitor changes to its delicate environment. Several hundred scientists will study Skylab's photographs to be helpful in the fields of agriculture, forestry, geology, hydrology, oceanography, geography, meteorology and ecology.

In addition to serving as an earth and solar observatory, Skylab will act as a factory in orbit. Its crewmen will use an electric furnace and a small vacuum chamber equipped with an electron beam welder to experiment with manufacturing processes in the weightless environment. Tests also will be made of welding and brazing techniques for later use in space repair and maintenance operations.

Nineteen high school students also will have experiments aboard Skylab, as a result of a national competition sponsored two years ago by NASA and the National Science Teachers' Association. The experiments will include the use of Skylab photographs to determine ways to predict imminent volcanic activity, a telescopic search for objects within the orbit of Mercury, and an experiment to see how spiders spin webs in weightlessness.

THE AUCTION WORLD

American Paintings Making Money Grade

By DIANA LOERCHER
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

NEW YORK — The room smelled of perfume and money. As the auctioneer's voice fired prices into the elegant crowd that jammed two rooms of Sotheby Parke Bernet no one moved, except to give a surreptitious signal to one of the bid spotters.

A head nodded imperceptibly, arms remained folded, a gold pen flicked the air like a serpent's tongue. The excitement was primitive: It could have been a bullfight, a horse race, or the coliseum.

The painting in question, "Little Joe with Cow" by the Japanese-American artist Yasuo Kuniyoshi, was sold for a record-breaking $220,000. Chief auctioneer John Marion, who is also the president of Sotheby, the nation's leading art auction house, commented in an interview later that he was afraid he had made a mistake and jumped the bid by $100,000. "Money was almost meaningless," he added. "I've never had that feeling before. It was a shock."

This particular Kuniyoshi was part of the Edith Halpert collection of early 20th Century American paintings auctioned off by SPB last month for an unprecedented grand total of an American painting sale of $3,670,675. The staggeringly high prices which the paintings brought were unanticipated even by SPB officialdom and broke a total of 17 previous records.

The Kuniyoshi garnered the highest price ever paid for a 20th Century American painting (surpassing the previous record of $75,000 for a Roy Lichtenstein) and also for a 20th Century work of art (compared with the $80,000 for a David Smith sculpture). Stuart Davis's "Hot Still Scape for Six Colors" broke the same records, though not by so wide a margin.

Georgia O'Keefe's "Poppies" went for $120,000 and scored a new record for a living American artist, and Elie Nadeleman's primitive wood sculpture, "Tango: A Pair of Figures," sold for $130,000, breaking the previous American sculpture record by $5,000. New records for individual painters, such as Ben Shahn and Lyonel Feininger, were also set.

The implications of the phenomenal success of this auction have reverberated throughout the art world. First of all, it provided an index, dramatic to the point of disbelief, or how art prices continue to catapult. There were those who protested privately after the auction the "excessiveness' and "absurdity" of the prices. But as Marion remarked, "The value of a work is what it's sold for." Evidently inspired by such hard economic truths, the Wall Street Journal even published an article evaluating art as the new international currency and investment.

Secondly, the sale underscored the influence of the art auction on prices. Since Parke-Bernet Galleries was acquired by the powerful British auction house, Sotheby's, in 1964, its sales have tripled and almost everything it touches turns to gold, in a financial sense at least. Marion reported in January of this year that net sales were up by almost $8.5 million since the beginning of the season (last September), a rise of more than 50 per cent.

There are several reasons why the art auction has become so popular. Essentially, it offers the opportunity for a rapid, virtually reliable, and highly competitive sale. It also obviates the complications that frequently arise during private transactions between dealers and collectors.

Marion compared the art auction to the stock market. "If you open the New York Times and read through the list of several thousand boring companies, how do you really find people who are interested in buying all these? Well, at least there they have numbers to go on, but that's the charm of the stock market. The stock market is, after all, an auction sale that takes place every day for — whatever it is — six hours. Well, an art sale here is the same thing. This is the stock market for the art world."

The astronomical prices that the paintings commanded at the Halpert auction are attributable to several factors, according to James Maroney, head of SPB's American painting department. Maroney cited Mrs. Halpert's reputation as a sponsor of early 20th Century American art; the unstable monetary situation which is causing more people to invest in art; and the mounting collector interest in American art.

Another major consideration is the expansion of the international market, especially in Japan. Three Japanese dealers bought 16 paintings for $632,000 at the Halpert auction, including nine of the 11 Kuniyoshi's and four Shahn's. There were obvious ethnic reasons for their interest in the Kuniyoshi's, but this does not belie the "Japanese art invasion," as Sotheby terms it. One theory is that the country's pervasive westernization has inevitably spilled over into the art sphere. Another more concrete explanation is that affluent Japanese are eagerly looking for a stable investment as a safeguard against inflation.

Until recently, Japanese buyers have concentrated on Impressionist and modern paintings and especially Oriental art which is enjoying an extraordinary vogue in international art circles these days. The Halpert auction was significant in that it marked the first major Japanese foray into American art, and their enthusiasm indicated that we need not look beyond our own shores for the next collecting trend.

Finally, not to be discounted in the analysis of any auction is the nature of auctions themselves. "Auction fever" is not a myth; it exists and causes bidders to behave like gamblers — to take chances they didn't plan to take, to pay more than they can afford, to mutter at the end, "What did I do?" It prompts a husband to ask his wife, about a painting running into the tens of thousands, "Do you want it?" and a man to say to his friends at the exit, "Did you get anything?" There seems to be an association of money with power that intoxicates and drives the bidding higher and higher.

For the first time since the Teapot Dome scandal 50 years ago, former Cabinet officers have been indicted by a federal grand jury.

Former Attorney General John Mitchell and Former Secretary of Commerce Maurice Stans were indicted on charges of perjury and obstructing justice. The grand jury indictment said they tried to block an investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission into financier Robert L. Vesco's dealings.

Vesco, former chairman of International Controls Corp., and 41 others have been accused in a civil suit filed by the SEC of milking foreign mutual funds of $244 million.

Mitchell and Stans, the indictment said, "by deceit, craft, trickery and means that are dishonest" tried to obstruct the investigation in exchange for a $200,000 contribution from Vesco to President Nixon's reelection campaign.

Food Buying Guide Designed For Schools

WASHINGTON (UPI) — After two years of preparation and testing, the Agriculture Department yesterday announced it is offering teachers a new set of lesson guides designed to train both high school students and adults in how to buy better food for less money.

Complete with aids including charts, refresher tests and even a pair of crossword puzzles, the new teaching guide is broken down into lessons on meat, dairy products, eggs, poultry, fresh fruits and vegetables, canned and frozen fruits and vegetables, and a final section on how to get more for your money.

The course material includes such practical guides as a pair of charts on the comparative cost of chicken or turkey parts when whole birds are selling at various prices.

Officials of the Agriculture Marketing Service (AMS), who prepared the lesson plans after having versions of the program pre-tested by a number of state educational agencies, said the guides would help teachers make coordinated use of a wide range of "how to buy" materials produced by the agency earlier. These include posters, slide sets, movies and a long list of pamphlets including one entitled "Money-Saving Main Dishes."

Many of the materials are available in both English and Spanish.

Teachers would also be urged to:

Compare the price perserving of various forms of the same food such as fresh, frozen and canned green beans.

Have students compare prices between different styles and brands of the same product, an exercise which can "make (them) aware of how simple it is to get the same product less expensively by comparative shopping both for brands and styles."

Officials said single copies of the loose-leaf lesson plans, titled "How to Buy Food — Lesson Aids for Teachers," will be sent free to teachers on request from the Office of Communication, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Policy On Pier To Be Studied

The Sausalito City Council, meeting at 8 p.m. Tuesday at city hall, will consider an arrangement allowing the Napa Street pier to remain over city property in exchange for a fee.

Attorney Leonard Rappa has criticized such an arrangement, calling it improper to allow the pier to continue encroaching on the city's Napa Street right-of-way, which lies underwater at that location.

The council also will consider the wording of a statement to be issued assuring voters that a scheduled $556,000 bond issue June 12 to buy Central School and a library site will not raise property taxes.

Profile Of A Marinite

"I have always had this keen feeling that if the law is to mean anything in a society, it has to mean something to the small man on the street," believes Marin County Public Defender Harold J. Truett.

AS PUBLIC DEFENDER for the County of Marin, Harold J. Truett heads a staff of 10 lawyers who represent the poor and see to it that they get the day in court to which all Americans are entitled. He regards the law as "a tool that should help everyone," and performs his duties with dedication.

By LARRY MOWELL

Harold J. Truett's role as Marin County public defender meshes well with his view that the law is a tool that should help everyone, "not a weapon for domination over those people who cannot afford to hire a lawyer."

After his graduation from Hastings College of the Law in San Francisco in 1950, Truett joined his father-in-law's law firm, which specialized in patents, trademarks and copyrights.

That didn't last long. Now 50 and the head of 10 lawyers who represent those too poor to hire an attorney, Truett looks back on his first two years in practice as "extremely dull."

"I just wasn't mechanically inclined and I just felt my aptitudes in the law were more in dealing with the social problems than the corporate and engineering problems," Truett said.

So, in 1953, he set out to apply his philosophy of the law and associated himself with the late Jerome Duffy in a San Rafael practice, a step which tied him closer and closer to defense of the indigent until his formal appointment as public defender in 1970.

"BASICALLY I have always had an interest in the work itself. I have always had this keen feeling that if the law is to mean anything in a society, it has to mean something to the small man on the street," he told the Independent-Journal.

The fellow who purchases an insurance policy or a car needs a lawyer as much as the company he buys from, but he usually can't afford the legal help, Truett said.

"The law basically is a social tool and it should be used to assist all people in society so as to make this a better coordinated society," he said. The law should prevent rights from being trampled, according to Truett.

HAROLD TRUETT'S championing of the poor began in the late 1950s when he was referral officer for the then privately funded Legal Aid Society, established by the Marin County Bar Association.

From 1959 to 1964, he did part-time public defense work when Peter Allen Smith, now a municipal court judge, and Jerome C. Durham, Truett's predecessor, did most of the public defender chore.

However, a 1964 supreme court decision made Truett, "in effect, the misdemeanor public defender." The court extended the right to an attorney to misdemeanor cases, but the county counsel said statutes forbade the official public defender to handle such cases.

THE UPSHOT was that the county contracted with Truett and Robert I. Conn to handle the misdemeanors and keep the files with the public defender cases in the firm of Buresh, Smith, Truett and Durham, Truett said.

When Smith was appointed judge, Durham became public defender and Truett his assistant. But what had been a part-time job soon became "fulltime plus" because the case load expanded dramatically "with the advent of the discovery of marijuana and the drug or dope culture," and with the continuing population boom in Marin, Truett said.

The increase in heroin usage with its accompanying explosion in burglaries and thefts has kept the public defender caseload high, he said. Truett now oversees nine other attorneys and a budget of $330,000 a year.

BUT, DESPITE his feelings for the poor, Truett's legal career would have been much different had he succeeded in his two races for elected offices.

In 1958 he ran for district attorney against William O. Weissich when other candidates for public office were trying to "get rid of the old crowd." Truett said, "I just kind of got on the bandwagon with everybody else."

He lost; and he lost again in 1970 when he fell back into the pack in a large field of candidates for municipal court judge.

His public life extended beyond the law in the years between the elections. He was on the Marin County Democratic Central Committee from 1959 to 1963, on the Marin County Human Rights Commission in 1964 and 1965, and served on the board of Catholic Social Services of Marin County.

BOATING HAS since replaced those activities. Truett races his 24-foot sloop in events sponsored by the San Francisco Yacht Racing Association and teaches classes on boating and seamanship for the Marin Power Squadron.

Socially, he has been a member of the Kiwanis Club and a past grand knight of the Knights of Columbus, as well as president of the San Anselmo Little League.

"The law basically is a tool and it should be used to assist all people in society . . ."

Truett now lives in Novato with his wife, the former Lois L. Mellin. The couple's son, Harold III, 27, is studying law at the University of San Francisco. Their two daughters, Michele and Denise, are studying nursing in San Francisco.

TRUETT WAS born in San Francisco to a Marin family, but his father died when he was 1-year-old. He lived the rest of his pre-adult years with his grandparents in San Francisco, but spent all his holidays in Lagunitas where the family had a cabin.

Enrolled at the University of Santa Clara, Truett joined the Army Reserved Officers Training Corps and was called up in 1943 during his junior year for duty in Italy. "I got over there just as hostilities terminated," he said.

Although trained as a forward observer for the artillery of the 88th Infantry Division, his war experience was with peace-keeping forces in Gorizia along the Italian-Yugoslavian border.

THE WAR HAD stopped, but peace was not much safer. Huge peace demonstrations on each side of the border were marred by explosions, deaths and "a number of armed engagements," Truett said.

Freed from the Army in 1946, Truett returned to Santa Clara to complete his undergraduate studies, then went to Hastings, graduating in 1950.

Then, after working for his father-in-law, Truett started his dedicated effort to give legal aid to those who can't afford to pay.

The Romantic Song Still Has Its Champion

Marin's John Van Jandel Composes From The Heart

IN THE RELAXING atmosphere of the patio at his Fairfax home, composer John Van Jandel works upon the score and lyrics of another song. In the foreground is the cut-in-Sweden album, "Days of Extension," made up entirely of his music, as performed by the European artists, Nannie Porres and Hayati Kafe. It is Van Jandel's first recording since coming to this country from Sweden in 1973 where he was once Europe's most famous bass viol player.

Is there still an audience in these cynical times for songs with titles like "Everytime I Saw You," "Somewhere, Someday, Somehow," "Rainbow Island" and "Love Me"?

Fairfax composer John Van Jandel hopes so, for he has a record album full of them, all his own compositions.

And he believes so, too, feeling that there is a nostalgic longing among many Americans for the old romantic songs.

"Anyway," he says, "I am a romantic at heart, and I couldn't write music or lyrics in any other way."

THE NEW album, "Days of Extension," contains 12 of his compositions in stereo, sung by Nannie Porres and Hayati Kafe.

Van Jandel returned to his native Sweden to cut the album. Miss Porres is one of Sweden's best-known female singers of contemporary music. Hayati Kafe is Turkish born, but has been living and working in Sweden since 1962.

Despite the Scandinavian origins of the album, and the European nationalities of the vocalists, the Van Jandel lyrics are sung in English. Still, the composer feels, his own residence of more than 25 years in this country notwithstanding, there is a European feeling to his work that may help it to catch on with U.S. listeners who often show a preference for foreign-flavored songs and tunes.

"DAYS OF Extension" is not the first time Van Jandel has heard his own music on a recording. But it is his first record since he left his native Sweden in 1957.

The dozen songs on "Days of Extension" all represent compositions done over the span of more than a quarter century that he has been in America. All are the creative products, too, of a rich musical background that began in boyhood.

Van Jandel was born in the small Swedish city of Karlskrona, the son of parents who were both musical, although neither professionals. His father played cornet, his mother the guitar.

AT AGE 7 he began playing the violin, and soon was something of a child prodigy. At 12, he also began studying piano, although violin remained his principal instrument. And at that age he began taking lessons from Otterino Frati, a well-known Italian conductor who was in Sweden to perform at the Swedish Opera and in Stockholm's Grand Hotel.

At 16 he was playing under the Frati baton in the Grand Hotel, then Stockholm's biggest luxury hotel with its famed winter garden.

He had also made the irreversible decision that music was to be his future and had entered the Royal Swedish Academy of Music in Stockholm, where he was to study off and on for the next eight years, mastering composition, conducting, harmonics and musical history along with advancing his instrumental virtuosity.

A MAJOR decision was a shift in instrument — from violin to the string bass or bass viol.

"Everyone seemed to be playing the violin," he explains. "I thought I would be better off in a less crowded field."

So he began studying the string bass with Prof. Knut Guldbrandsson of the academy's prestigious faculty.

His long experience with the violin proved most helpful in learning the new instrument, Van Jandel says. And yet, he adds, a comparison of the two instruments as to difficulty is impossible — "they are just two different things."

OVER THE next 25 years Van Jandel was to enjoy a busy and successful career in Sweden as a professional musician, playing the classics — "to which I was always strongly oriented" —, popular music and jazz, and doing a considerable amount of composing.

One of his songs with a title that translates roughly into English as "I Would Like to Know More About Love," enjoyed a considerable popularity on a recording in Sweden.

"I had other music on records," he says, "but no real big hits."

He played and traveled Europe with such bands and groups as those of Peter Kreuder, Arne Hulphers, Svend Assmussen and Hakan von Eichwald.

"I PLAYED IN every European country except Spain and Portugal," he says.

Stockholm was then a haven and principal visiting point for American jazz artists. Van Jandel had the opportunity to sit in and play with the likes of Louis Armstrong, Coleman Hawkins and Joe Venuti.

"I didn't find the transition to jazz at all difficult," he says. "Scandinavians have a special affinity and liking for jazz."

With Europa Film, Sandrews Film Atelier and the Swedish film industry, he wrote songs and theme music for motion pictures including the work of such filmmakers as Ingmar Bergman and Alf Kjelin.

HE LED HIS own musical group.

There were concert stage appearances, too. Complete programs of bass violin and piano are rare, but Van Jandel performed them, with Hindemith's concerto the highlight of his performance.

"I am a romantic at heart and I couldn't write music or lyrics in any other way," says John Van Jandel, who feels there is still an audience for the old-fashioned love songs.

He was deeply involved in Swedish broadcasting, but had become uncomfortable with the policies of those running the medium. Then, too, he had met a blonde Swedish girl, Gunvor, and had fallen in love with her with all his romantic soul.

THEY WERE married, and they decided 1957 would be a good time for a new beginning in a new country.

Both had three children by earlier marriages. And with the six youngsters, they pulled up stakes and headed for America.

"That was quite a thing," Van Jandel laughs today, "making a new beginning, with the responsibility for a new wife and six children."

They headed first for Houston, Tex., where they had friends. Those friends got Van Jandel involved with the musicians there, and soon he was traveling with the Henry King

IN SWEDEN, John Van Jandel began playing the violin at age 7, and was soon regarded as a child prodigy. By the time he was 16, he was playing with the orchestra at Stockholm's luxurious Grand Hotel, right, and a few years later made the shift from the violin to the bass viol as his principal instrument.

"After that, I did a lot of things," Van Jandel says. They remained in Houston two years, then decided to move on to California, "where we had other friends."

On the West Coast, Van Jandel tried a number of jobs outside of music. Work in a San Francisco restaurant led him to open his own restaurant, specializing in Scandinavian dishes, on San Rafael's Fourth Street, "but I didn't have enough money to keep it going."

Through all these years, Van Jandel continued with his music. But the bass viol was put aside more and more in favor of composing. And eventually the big instrument was given to one of his sons, Ola, now 30 and long out on his own.

OF THE CHILDREN, only the oldest son went into music briefly on a serious basis. But he has since given it up and now lives with his wife and two children in Sweden where he works for National Cash Register.

Whenever John Van Jandel feels a yearning now to make music on an instrument, he picks up the violin, his stringed bass no longer being on hand. It was on the violin that he auditioned for the earned membership in the San Francisco Musicians' Union. He is a member, too, of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP), and was elected to membership in the Songwriters Hall of Fame.

He has been back to his native Sweden twice — once when his mother died, the sec-

String Bass Virtuoso Is Now A Composer

GUNVOR VAN JANDEL serves refreshments to her composer-musician husband John in the patio of their Fairfax home. The couple came to America in 1957 from Sweden, bringing with them their six children.

FOR THE MAKING of the album, he borrowed broadcasting studio facilities in Stockholm, using his old contacts there. And he conducted the studio musicians who back up the two vocalists.

Nannie Porres is Stockholm-born. She began singing at age 15 in the Nalen, one of Stockholm's largest dancing halls. During the 1950s and 1960s she traveled extensively with prominent Swedish orchestras. And she has been seen often on television and in Swedish and Italian movies.

She was featured at the 1972 Altus Music Festival in Finland along with such stars as American saxophonist Dexter Gordon and Sweden's Ake (the Count) Persson.

Turkish-born Hayati Kafe worked with the Carl-Henrick Norins and Kenneth Staags orchestras after coming to Sweden in 1962. He sings now in supper club shows and on the concert stage, and appears on television and radio in Sweden, Norway and Germany.

HE HAS BEEN making records since 1965, and in 1968 collaborated with America's Bobby Darin in making "Things" that proved a hit.

The album bears a color photograph of the two vocalists, and Van Jandel's own label — Dellja Publishing, Box 14, Fairfax, Calif., 94930.

Several hundred of the albums have been cut and are stored in a Southern California warehouse awaiting what Van Jandel hopes will be a brisk demand for the records that will justify the production of still more of the discs.

EVENTUALLY, Van Jandel will try the European market. But America comes first.

Already the album has been heard locally on San Rafael's radio KTIM. And national exposure is scheduled.

Van Jandel describes it as "a rather moody and romantic kind of music — the kind that just seems to come out of me."

He admits: "I don't go for rock very much myself."

And he regrets, particularly, the replacement in so much of today's contemporary music of his beloved string bass by the bass guitar. "To me, it isn't the same."

BUT, HE ADDS, some of the string bass players performing in America today, particularly with jazz groups, "are very, very good."

Van Jandel is already beginning the composing of new songs for another album. "But it is a long, long job," he says.

A stout, genial and handsome man, at 61 he enjoys good health. His Swedish accent is still very much present and pleasant to the ears as he talks about his composing, which he sometimes works at in his garden.

"It is something you can't hurry," he says. "Sometimes an idea will come to you out of the clear, blue sky, in a flash. And you must jot it down immediately — then await the next flash."

AND WHICH of his many compositions is his personal favorite?

He considers the question for a minute, then replies: "I guess I like the one I called "I Found My Happiness' best because that pretty much tells the story of my life."

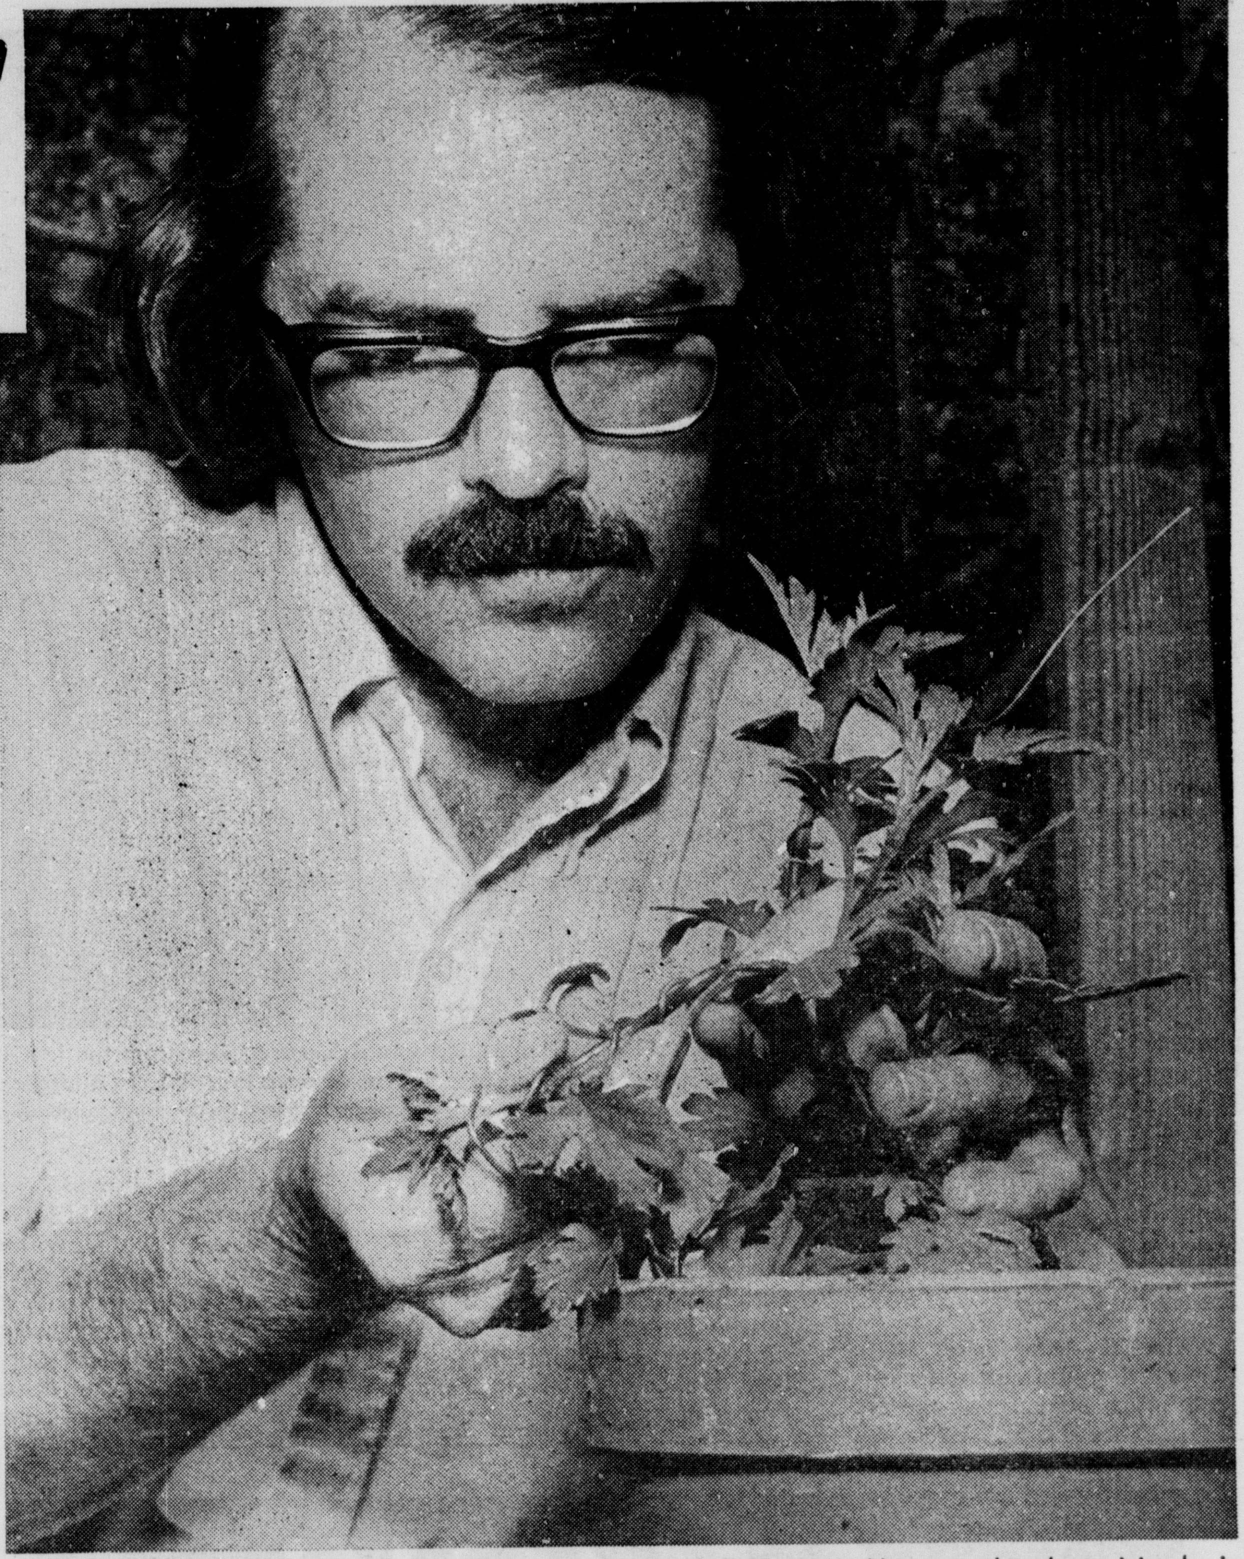
By PEG KEENER



WIRE IS USED by Dave Wahler of Mill Valley in the early forming of what will become a cascade-form bonsai chrysanthemum. Once the trunk line of the plant is shaped, the wire will be removed. It is vital, hobbyist Wahler says, that the training be in harmony with, not contrary to, the cultivar's normal growth pattern.

Bonsai enthusiasts are not all that unusual in Marin County. Neither are chrysanthemum growers.

But "green thumbers" who combine the ancient art of bonsai with the cultivation of the 'mum are relatively few in number.

Still they exist. And they are growing numerically.

One member of these select ranks is David Wahler of Mill Valley, current president of the Chrysanthemum Society of Marin and now in his fourth year as a specialist in the creation of dwarfed chrysanthemums.

A NATIVE Californian, born in Whittier, Wahler has had a long acquaintance with the 'mum. It began as a boy in Southern California where he heped his parents grow 'mums by the hundreds in their garden as cut flowers.

It was after moving to Northern California in 1967, and settling with his wife and children in a comfortable old Mill Valley home, that Wahler began developing his own expertise in growing iris and chrysanthemums of the garden variety.

Marin, he found, has the ideal climate for the 'mum. And the plant is easily, inexpensively grown, blooming the first year, and giving continuing stock.

A SUN-LOVER, the chrysanthemum can be grown in pots as well as in the ground, and provides fine cut flowers in the autumn, long after most plants have finished blooming.

Wahler says the development of his interest in bonsai 'mums was a natural outgrowth of his interest in the standard-size plants, and of his profession as a designer of buildings, commercial interiors and furniture.

"The growing became a creative challenge," he says, "and in bonsai, I found an especially reqarding, creative experience."

NOW HE SAYS:"After three full years of bonsai, I find I am gradually getting to really know the cultivar that I am working with. A close affinity develops between the grower and the plant.

Wahler defines bonsai as "the art of developing a miniature tree that resembles a tree as found in nature — definitely not a distorted, twisted plant that is unnatural."

THE WIRING and pruning that determine the plant's growth pattern should be supportive of the natural habits of the cultivar, not in conflict with them, he adds.

"Much to my surpirse," he says, "I have found that each of the 12 to 15 different chrysanthemum cultivars grown has subtle differences from all the others in the growth patterns that determine its final form."

There is one distinction between the chrysanthemum bonsai and other bonsais — the grower has no chrysanthemum tree to use as a model. "So we direct the chrysanthemum toward a resemblance of other tree forms, principally the conifers," Wahler says. "And it is important that the correct cultivar be selected for the specific plant form, to avoid undue forcing and distorting."

WAHLER GOT his initial guidance in 'mum bonsai from other growers, and from the book, "The Art of the Chrysanthemum," written by Tameji Nakajima in collaboration with H. Carl Young. "Without that help I would have been lost," he confesses.

Since that first invaluable instruction, the plants themselves have become Wahler's principal teachers.

"We even have a little conversation now and then," he laughs, "so that the plant has a definite say in determining what it is going to grow up to be."

THAT GROWING process for the chrysanthemum bonsai begins from December to February with the rooting of cuttings from parent plants. By the end of March or April, the original cuttings can be transferred from the cutting bench to a four-inch pot. New shoots will have started at the base of the plant. It is one of these new shoots that willbe selected as the final plant for bonsai development, with the original cutting gradually trimmed back to the base.

The new shoot is used, Wahler explains, because it combines the advantages of the heavy root system of the original cutting with the extreme flexibility of young trunk and stem growth.

At the right stage, this plant is transferred from the four-inch pot to a six-inch claypot. During the transplanting, the roots are examined carefully, trimmed and laid out in a radial manner around the base of the plant, removing smaller and distorted roots.

THIS IS repeated several times during the growing season, always taking great care to preserve the large roots and to form them in harmony with the projected final plant form. "The roots become a significant part of the composition of the completed, full plant," Wahler explains.

Training of the plant itself begins when the new shoot is approximately an inch high. Initial main stem training will be done either with bamboo stakes or wire, depending upon whether the final form is to be formal upright, cascade, semi-cascade, multiple trunk, or any of the other identifiable bonsai forms.

Often the pots will be set on their side, or even turned upside down over two separated supports so that the early form-

Bonsai 'Mums' Are His Specialty

AFTER THE form of the main stem is established basically, the plant is transferred to a six-inch plastic pot for the remainder of the growing season. And some six weeks before showtime, the final potting takes place, into a bonsai-type pot properly scaled to the plant.

At this point, the plant often is mounted on stone, lava rock and driftwood, with ground or powdered live moss added to the surface to give the finished pot a pleasing appearance of antiquity.

The bonsai 'mum differs from standard chrysanthemums in that it is fed and watered less often to reduce the size of the leaves. The plants, however, are kept in full sun.

WAHLER ALSO notes that chrysanthemum cultivars selected for bonsai treatment have characteristics that differ from the other garden or large show plants. These include a short growing habit, small leaf and bloom size (one-half to three-quarters of an inch in diameter), close internodes, good branching, and abundant fluorescence.

"The growing of bonsai chrysanthemums is definitely a creative art form," Wahler says. "After a busy day at my job, I find time spent with my bonsais is like a walk through the woods — a spiritual experience, full of wonder and discovery as you assist a plant through all the stages of growth from a cutting to a fully developed plant in bloom."

In a year's growth, a bonsai 'mum can pass through the stages of several years of regular culture.

THESE PLANTS can continue from year to year, and some continue their growth up to 10 and 12 years. But there is a gradual decrease in fluorescence, so that most specialists prefer to start anew each year with new plants and new objectives.

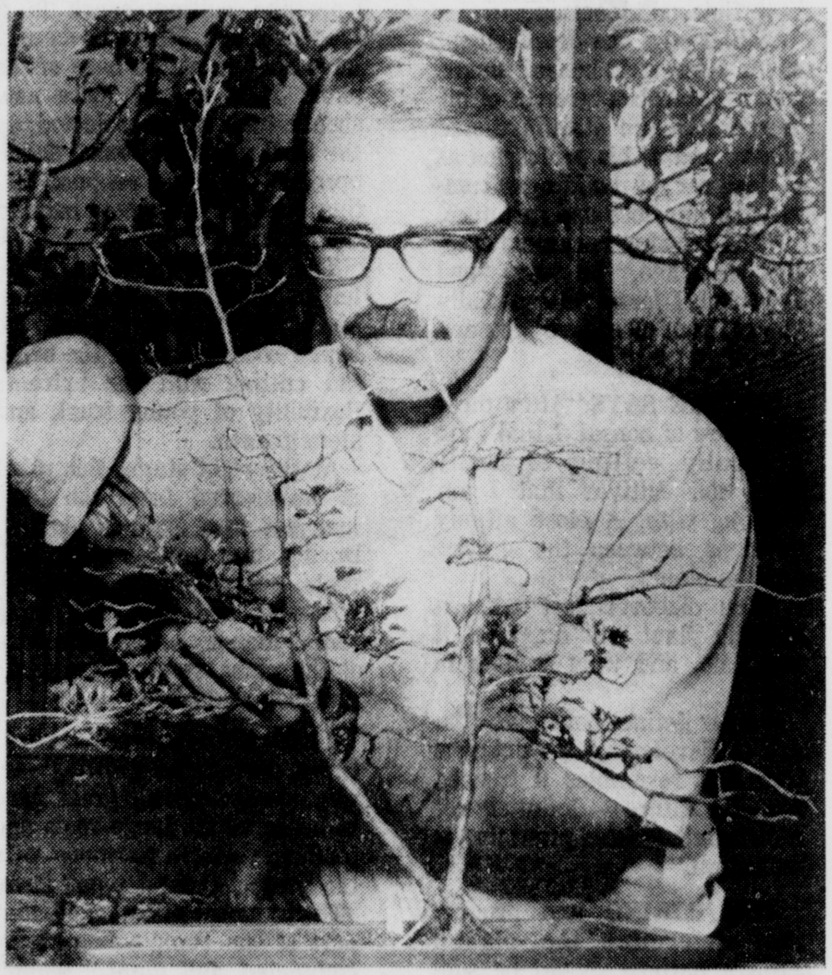
But one of his favorite events is not a show at all — but a sale, sponsored by the Marin Chrysanthemum Society he heads. He has been busy preparing rooted cuttings of bonsai cultivars for the society's annual plant sale, to be conducted next Saturday at the Montecito Shopping Center, in front of the Crocker National Bank, San Rafael, from 9 a.m. "until the plants are all sold out" — usually by mid-afternoon.

WAHLER'S enjoyment of the sale comes from the knowledge that he is introducing other Marinites and Northern Californians to the pleasures of 'mum bonsai that has given him such satisfaction.



THIS IS A second-year bonsai chrysanthemum, and David Wahler is pruning and trimming, just as one might do with a full-size plant. Many 'mum bonsai enthusiasts, however, prefer to start afresh each year with new cultivars. Wahler will be offering bonsai cultivars for sale at next Saturday's Chrysanthemum Society of Marin annual plant sale at San Rafael's Montecito Shopping Center.

75 Years Of The Red Cross

By NANCY HAYDEN

This month marks the 75th anniversary of the Red Cross in Marin County.

It is a history that reaches back to an era when the first Red Cross Societies were being organized in California, and when Marin was still comprised of towns and villages strung out like beads on a thread along the railroad.

The luxurious Hotel Rafael in San Rafael boasted it was only 50 minutes by ferry and train from San Francisco. Mrs. Louis Sloss, who was to become one of the founders of the local Red Cross, and her husband moved from their home in San Rafael to join their friends Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Hecht, future Red Crossers who "summered" at the impressive hotel.

The private racetracks that once had been a part of the large ranches, such as the Shafters of The Oaks at Olema, were gone, but F. William McKinnon, superintendent at St. Vincent's School for Boys, maintained a stable there. He sold many of his horses to raise money for the school and raced others. His most famous racehorse, Abomination, was exhibited at county fairs from Sacramento to San Jose.

In January of 1898, Marin residents discussed newspaper reports that the battleship Maine had been ordered to Havana to protect American life and property if the Cuban insurgents continued to riot against their Spanish overlords.

At her San Rafael home, Mrs. W. B. Bradford admired the little cupid on the card sent by her husband, a descendent of the first governor of Plymouth. Bradford was in Alaska as a part of his duties as first secretary of the Alaska Packers Association. Pauline Bradford appreciated his taking the time to send the sentimental token honoring the patron of love.

Louisianna Foster light heartedly celebrated Valentine's Day by having friends to a tea at Fairhills. Her home was rapidly gaining a reputation as a center for entertaining because of the graciousness of its Southernborn hostess.

THE DAINTY Mrs. A. W. Foster was the daughter of Dr. William A. Scott, who founded the San Francisco Theological Seminary. Her husband eventually became interested in her father's work and gave the seminary the land in San Anselmo where it now stands.

The fact that Dr. Scott had been hung in effigy during the Civil War because of his Southern sympathies was never mentioned at the Fairhills gatherings.

At 9:40 p.m., on Feb. 15, 1898, the battleship Maine was blown up in Havana Harbor, and the United States set upon a course which was to cuminate in war with Spain.

Miss F. Rea, daughter of the retired Mill Valley minister, read of the incident in a story written by George Bronson Rea in Harper's weekly.

CORRESPONDENT Rea wrote, "Thirty minutes after taps — at 10 minutes after nine o'clock, on Feb. 14, 1898, the serenity of the night of Havana Harbor was shattered."

Miss Rea's namesake reported on how a few twisted sections of the mainmast and tangled segments of superstructure were all that showed above the surface of Havana Harbor to reveal the Maine's burial place. Of the 350 men and officers who had sailed into Havana a few short weeks before, only 90 were alive. The public and the press, in sympathy with Cuba's revolution, became more and more insistent upon war with Spain.

Marin Superior Court Judge Frank Angellotti discussed the coming war with his wife over morning coffee. He pointed out that despite all signs of coming conflict, the War Department had done little or nothing to organize or equip a fighting force.

THE FORMER Marin County district attorney read aloud from the Marin Journal a report that President William McKinley had issued a call for 125,000 volunteers. These, with the 100,000 men in the state guard units, President McKinley felt, seemed to be enough to throw into the field against any nation.

"Unfortunately," Frank Angellotti said, "nobody has stopped to consider that there is no equipment and no arms for such a large force."

Finally on April 25, the Congress adopted a joint resolution establishing that a state of war

MILL VALLEY'S Red Cross ladies were busy workers during the Spanish-American War period, but nevertheless found time for the all-important cup of tea. Portrayed here are Mrs. Thomas Reynolds, president of the Mill Valley society; Kathleen Thompson (later novelist Kathleen Norris), vice president; a Miss Kingwell, secretary, and Miss F. Rea, treasurer.

with Spain existed. Commodore George Dewey was dispatched from Hong Kong to the Philippine Islands with instructions to destroy the Spanish fleet.

BY SATURDAY, May 1, Dewey's fleet reached Manila Harbor and Dewey issued the order, "You may fire when ready, Gridley," to Cap. Charles V. Gridley of the Olympia.

The flagship's eight-inch guns roared out and seven hours later the entire Spanish squadron was useless.

When news of the victory reached Marin, crowds gathered and danced in the streets.

"Oh, what a glorious war," former Marin Journal publisher Simon F. Barstow said to his wife Laura. "A Naval victory within the first week. Surely the war will be over in less than a month." He was wrong, the war was to be prolonged for over three years.

THE EASTERN and Southern states became the seat of the war which was first waged in the Spanish Caribbean Archipelago. The principal emergency relief work was done by the Red Cross, aided largely by the Cuban Relief Committee of New York, which raised over $215,000.

The surrender of the Spanish Army at Santiago speedily closed the military operations there, and the theater of war was transferred to the Philippine Archipelago. Troops for this campaign were mobilized on the Pacific Coast with headquarters in San Francisco.

All told, the number of officers and men going out and returning through the Golden Gate amounted to over 185,000 from June, 1898, to July, 1902.

EQUIPMENT issued years before the the National Guard units had deteriorated until it was almost useless. Haversacks had rotted, leather articles had decayed. Some of the new enlistees arrived with no changes of underwear, some had neither shoes nor socks.

With the order for the National Guard, as the First California Volunteers, to go to Manila, Red Cross Societies sprang into existence around the Bay Area.

Sausalito was one of the first of the suburban towns to respond to the needs of the troops. On May 16, 1898, the formidable Mrs. J. L. Tillinghast started collecting for the Red Cross on the ferryboat. The same day she bought a bolt of flannel for the troops with the donations.

MRS. WAKEFIELD Baker actually started the Red Cross in Marin County when she called a meeting in Sausalito on May 17, 1898. She was elected president of the newly formed Sausalito Red Cross Society, and Mrs. J. W. Harrison, of the lovely estate, La Vuelta, became vice president. Mrs. Louis Harrison was named secretary and Mrs. Tillinghast became treasurer.

The fast-moving ladies managed to "acquire" a room in the village, free of charge, which they used as headquarters for meetings, sewing, etc., and where they were assisted by several ladies from San Rafael.

The San Rafael ladies soon tired of the long trip to Sausalito.

On the morning of May 23, Mrs. Louis Sloss, wife of the Judge, gathered together a group who formed a San Rafael Red Cross Society. Mrs. Sloss became honorary president of the new volunteer organization. Mrs. John F. Boyd and Pauline Bradford, whose husband had been mayor of San Rafael for many years, were elected vice presidents, along with Mrs. Louis Gerstle, whose descendent Michael Wornum now sits on the Marin County Board of Supervisors.

HANNA WILKINS, whose magnificent estate, Violet Terrace, was given to San Rafael in 1930, also became a vice president. Her husband, Hepburn Wilkins, was considered Marin's ablest attorney.

Mrs. W. W. Morrow, wife of Judge Morrow, Mrs. Frank S. Johnson, and Mrs. W. J. Wickman, the former Hattie Dutton of Tomales, became vice presidents of the San Rafael Red Cross Society. Laura Barstow, wife of the former newspaper publisher and San Rafael City Trustee Simon Barstow, was elected treasurer, and Mrs. Angellotti, secretary.

Once the Society was formed, Mrs. George T. Page took over as president. George F. Foster's Chilean-born wife became vice president while Mrs. Barstow and Mrs. Angellotti stayed on as treasurer and secretary.

AN EXECUTIVE committee to the San Rafael Red Cross Society was formed which included Mrs. E. W. Newhall; Mrs. A. W. Foster; Mrs. William Sale, whose husband owned a furniture store; Mrs. A. F. Feckteler, wife of Lieutenant Feckteler; Edwina Dufficy, wife of Superior Court Judge M. C. Dufficy; Mrs. William Elliott; Mrs. Leon A. Lancel, whose husband served on the vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church; Mrs. Charles Christieson, wife of Major Christieson; Mrs. Thomas Winteringham, of Laurel Place; Mrs. John Alexander; Mrs. Sidney M. Smith, wife of the prominent lawyer; and Mrs. Sidney B. Cushing, wife of one of the founders of the Mt. Tamalpais Railroad.

When Mrs. Cushing's mother died in 1889, she placed a stained glass window in St. Paul's Episcopal Church as a memorial to Elizabeth Butterfield.

Mrs. Philip N. Lillienthal and Mrs. Hecht, San Francisco residents who "summered" in Marin, also served on the San Rafael Red Cross Society Executive Committee.

A FEW DAYS later an active Red Cross Society of 38 women was formed in Belvedere. Mrs. Albert Gebering was elected president and the very social Mrs. J. W. Pew was treasurer.

Most ladies had one visiting day a month, but Mrs. Pew was so active she held court on three visiting days a month at The Pagoda, in Belvedere. Mrs. Thomas Lake Miller, of Edgehill, became secretary.

The ladies entered upon their work, "immediately, enthusiastically, and with commendable results."

A Red Cross Society was also formed in Mill Valley. There, Mrs. Thomas Reynolds was elected president. Flora Reynolds later became president of the Outdoor Art Club, where Red Cross meetings were held, and postmistress of Mill Valley. Kathleen Thompson was elected vice president, Miss Kingwell secretary, and Miss F. Rea treasurer. Misses Kellogg and Grant served as members of the Mill Valley Red Cross Society Advisory Board.

IN LESS THAN one month after the first Red Cross Society was formed, the need of a state organization was recognized.

On May 25, 1898, a State Advisory Council, consisting of delegates from societies already formed, met. Present were Mrs. W. B. Harrington and Mrs. Wakefield Baker of Sausalito. Later Mrs. Angellotti, whose daughter Marian was then 10-years-old, was added to the state working force.

Applications for membership to the state society were received from 107 Red Cross Societies, including Belvedere, Mill Valley, San Rafael, Sausalito and Ross Valley.

About $180,000 was raised in California, much of it remote and interior towns. One enthusiastic worker told how money was raised in her county — by the children — and of contributions received from Indians. One dear old lady rode 20 miles over rough mountain roads to bring her donations of comfort bags, bandages, etc., as well as some "nice little delicacies for the sick boys."

IN VALLEY FORD there were auxiliaries of young girls. At entertainments for the troops they recited poems, breathing the fiercest sentiments against the Spanish. At this time there were many descendents of the original land grant grantees living in Marin — Reed, Sanchez, Sais — and many of them served with the U.S. forces.

All troops coming to California were met by Red Cross hospitality committees who gave them a substantial meal. In their first year of existenance the San Rafael, Sausalito and Belvedere Red Cross Societies welcomed thousands of soldiers. They also helped furnish lunches to all outgoing troops.

The long list of unknown dead of the Civil War was the inspiration for little "Identification Medals," which were furnished by the Red Cross to troops of the first expedition to the Philippines. The badges were made of aluminum, about the size of a half dollar, and were inscribed with the company, regiment and number of each soldier.

OWING TO the large quanities of supplies pouring in from all parts of the state, the Red Cross soon found it necessary to open a supply department. Mrs. E. W. McKinstry, wife of Judge McKinstry, prominent in Marin courts, was appointed chief of the State Supply Department of the California Red Cross Association.

Here is Mrs. McKinstry's report on a small portion of donations received from San Diego to Shasta from June to Aug. 6, 1898:

"21,784 abdominal bandages, 5,322 esmarch bandages (similar to today's Ace bandage), 2,638 rolled bandages, 10,308 comfort bags, 2,492 sheets, 5,585 denim pillow ticks, 239 hospital and surgical shirts, 13 Arab tents, 388 packages of literature, 397 boxes of fresh fruit, 103 sacks of dried fruit, 200 plaster of paris banadages, and 4,308 pillow cases."

MRS. McKINSTRY also reported receiving large quantities of groceries, preserves, vegetables, drugs and thousands of useful articles.

By mid-May the First California Volunteers were ordered to Manila on the City of Peking. They were accompanied by two male Red Cross nurses who had given up lucrative positions to offer their services to the Red Cross. When they arrived at Cavite, the nurses, A. Parker Lewis and Christian M. Waage, joined Marinite Fr. William McKinnon in caring for the sick and wounded.

Father McKinnon had just finished a five year stint at St. Vincent's School for Boys. He enlisted shortly after war against Spain was declared and was appointed chaplain of the First Regiment, California Volunteers, on May 13, 1898.

FATHER McKINNON, whose statue now stands in Golden Gate Park, died of cholera in the Philippines on Sept. 26, 1902.

Waage sent word back to California that he was, "in despair about the hospital supplies." They were absolutely inadequate to the demand. Besides being short of supplies, Waage and Lewis were short of nurses.

"Lewis has enough to do in the operating room," said Waage, "and I am busy all day going from patients in quarters to patients in hospitals. I move all day among typhoid and measles patients."

The crushing load took its toll of Lewis, who became ill and had to be returned to California.

TO TRY AND meet the need for nurses, the Red Cross arranged for a series of lectures for those desiring to become Red Cross nurses. Through the services of several doctors, including Dr. Rixford of the Sausalito Rixfords, a large class of men and women were able to attend daily lectures.

In June of 1898 San Rafael Company D was called up as part of the Eighth Regiment, California Volunteers, under the command of Col. Park Henshaw.

By August the Red Cross received permission to send more nurses to the Philippines on four transports engaged for the fourth expedition. They were the City of Pueblo, Peru, Pennsylvania, and the ill-fated Rio De Janeiro, which later sank in San Francisco Bay. They were to be used to take the troops to the Philippines and return as hospital ships, bringing back the sick and woulded.

ONE OF THE greatest desires of the Red Cross was granted when the organization was notified they could send a limited number of women nurses on these ships. From a long list, eight women were selected, along with eight male nurses.

When the nurses arrived in Manila they set up hospital tents which heavy rains rendered almost useless. They then secured a building at Ermita, which they fitted up for the special use of the California volunteers.

On the 8th of June, 1899, Waage returned to California with the First California Volunteers on the hospital ship Sherman. He observed, "We plowed our way across the Pacific, onwards and homewards, to where suspense should cease, when we of the Red Cross should have accomplished our mission and lay down our work."

BUT THE WORK of the Red Cross was not to be laid down! It became apparent that no provision had been made by the government for care of convalescent soldiers. Upon leaving the division hospital, they were returned to their tents and in their weakened condition contacted colds or suffered relapses.

Permission was given the Red Cross, in August, 1898, to open a home which became Letterman Hospital in 1911 — for convalescents in the Presidio.

In these early days of the Red Cross it was also called upon to aid in securing transportation home for soldiers discharged for disability, by reason of sickness contracted before enlistment. They were discharged without pay, had no means of getting home, and so, strangers in a strange land, sick and helpless, came to the Red Cross, whose kindness they had experienced while in camp.

WITH THE RETURN of the volunteers from the Philippines, more of this work became necessary. The Red Cross aided many discharged and stranded men to return to their homes. Many very sick men were accompanied by Red Cross nurses.

In this the Red Cross was greatly assisted by Maj. Gen. W. R. Shafter, commanding officer of the Department of the Pacific. His uncles were large landowners in Marin and their land is now in the U.S. Point Reyes National Seashore.

According to Helen Van Cleave Park, "Despite what we hear about the Rough Riders and Teddy Roosevelt, it was General Shafter who won the war."

THE SIGHT OF a young soldier buried in a rough shirt, with shavings for his pillow, and the utter helplessness of the government to deal with the conditions demanding relief at the Presidio, caused the Red Cross to form what was termed the Funeral Committee.

Mrs. Ada Van Pelt served on this committee. She was often seen taking the early morning ferryboat to San Francisco. The frequent deaths incident upon camp life necessitated the daily attendance of some member of the committee to see that flowers and flags were placed upon the coffin and grave of every soldier buried at the Presidio, and to communicate with faraway relatives.

A TRANSPORT Receiving Committee, also headed by Mrs. Van Pelt, relative of the late famous Marin landscape architect, Helen Van Pelt Wilson, was formed.

The ladies were allowed to board all incoming transports to provide information for the troops and look after the wants of the sick men.

EVEN BEFORE the "necessities" of the Spanish-American War were over, it became increasingly apparent that the work of the Red Cross would never be finished.

In 1901 the great Galveston, Tex., disaster was caused by wind and high water. A city of 40,000 people lost nearly 10,000 inhabitants in 24 hours. Red Cross relief work was carried on for two months under the supervision of Clara Barton, founder of the American National Red Cross. She was aided in her work by contributions from the California Red Cross.

THE SAN FRANCISCO earthquake and fire of April 18, 1906, was the first disaster where the President officially designated the American National Red Cross to administer the funds donated for disaster relief.

The earthquake did very little damage in San Rafael. At Olema and Pt. Reyes Station buildings were shaken from their foundation, and the modern stone Tomales Catholic Church was a mass of debris. Crowds of refugees from San Francisco cloekd to Marin County and committees were formed to take care of the stricken visitors.

To administer disaster funds two chapters of the American National Red Cross were quickly organized. In San Rafael E.

THE UTTER helplessness of the government in time of great sickness and frequent death caused the formation of Red Cross Funeral Committees. Here the "stand-in" for Ada Van Pelto, committee member, leaves her home to take an early morning ferryboat to San Francisco to place flowers upon the coffin of a soldier, being buried at the Presidio, and to communicate with distant relatives.

MRS. FRANK ANGELOTTI became a member of the "state working force" of the newly formed State Advisory Council of the Red Cross in 1898. She instructed her maid to continue to prepare "nice delicacies for the sick boys" as a San Rafael Red Cross Society contribution to the wartime cause.

TO TRY AND meet the desperate needs of Red Cross workers in the Philippines for medical supplies, Red Cross volunteers in Marin acquired drug supplies that they bottled and then sent on to the California Red Cross Association supply department.

B. Martinelli served as president, with L. A. Lancel as secretary and S. M. Augustine as treasurer. They were aided in their work by the Sausalito Chapter of the American National Red Cross. Mrs. W. J. Harrison was Sausalito Chapter President, Mrs. W. G. Morrow, vice president, Mrs. J. R. Hannify, secretary, and Frank Maino, treasurer.

MARTINELLI was appointed colonel for disaster relief.

General relief headquarters were opened in the King Building on Fourth Street. The Armory was headquarters for receiving clothing and food. Mrs. William Babcock was in charge of the Emergency Hospital and Mrs. W. J. Wickman of the nurses. It was estimated about 10,000 people from San Francisco were in Marin County at the time, either with friends or in relief camps.

By Aug. 12, 1912, the Marin County Chapter of the American National Red Cross was chartered. The Red Cross has served in Marin County through war and peace for 75 years. This May, the volunteer organization celebrates its Diamond Jubilee, its work still not finished.

MOTHER

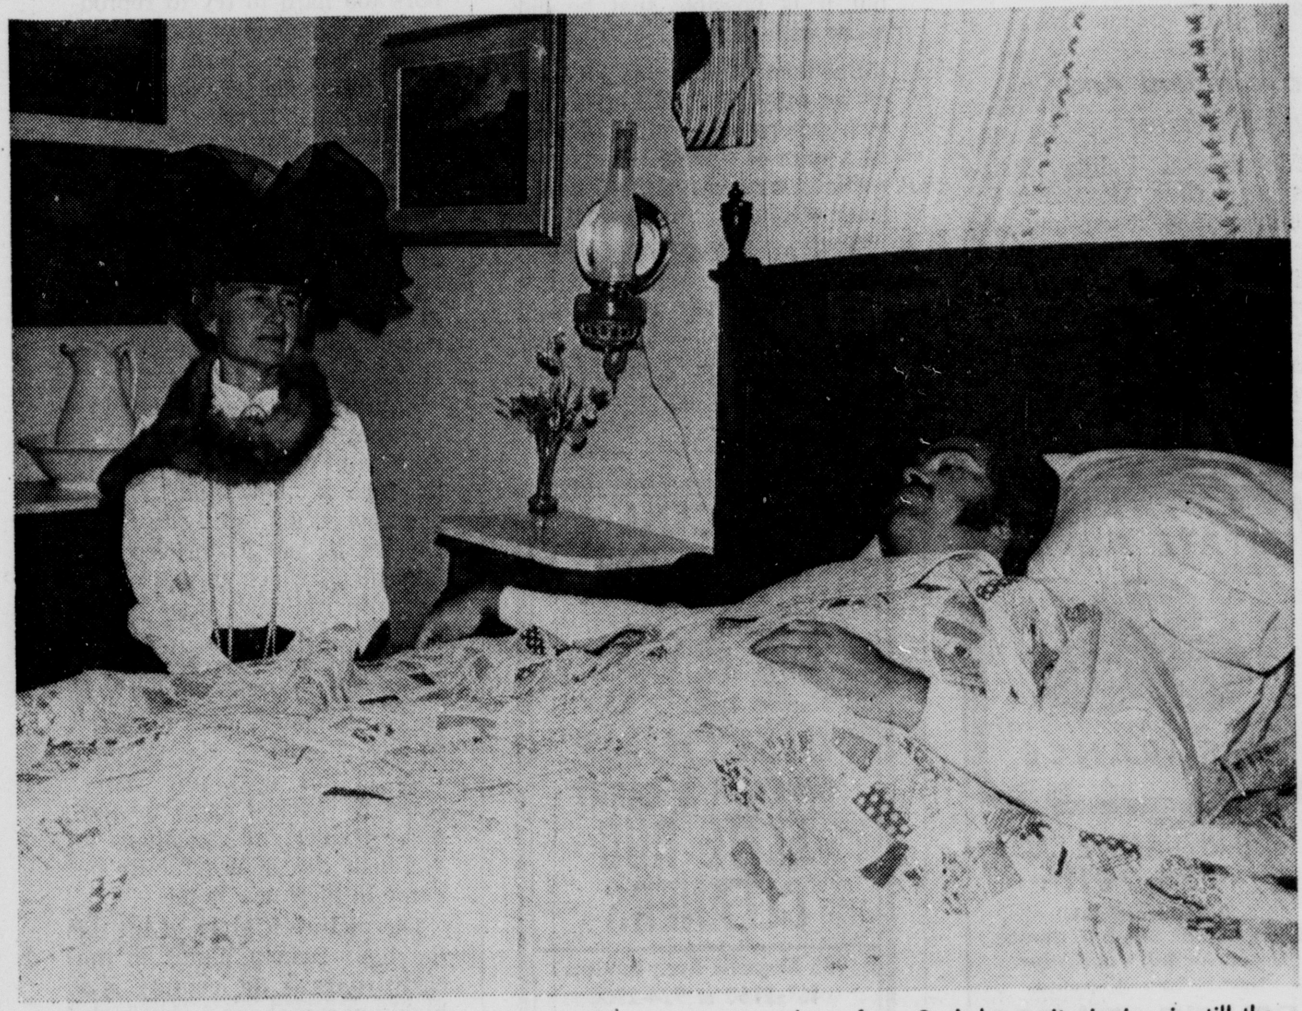
MARIN RED CROSS volunteers served as Canteen Workers, helping troops bound for overseas duty, during time of war. In peace, the volunteers continued their services with community assistance programs ranging from first aid and water safety training to disaster relief and nursing.

THE ANGELOTTI MAID then delivered the foods selected for their suitability for the ailing to the Red Cross Hospital Committee. It was that group's duty to distribute the contributions to the sick and wounded in hospital rooms that had been placed at the disposal of the Red Cross.



TROOP RECEIVING and hospital committees member Ada Van Pelt visited convalescing Spanish-American War soldiers at their sickbeds, dispensing cheer and comfort. Such humanitarianism is still the basic premise upon which the Red Cross functions today, 75 years after its coming to Marin County.

David Douglas, Botanist

Apprentice under-gardener to prestigous employment with the Royal Horticultural Society and international recognition in less than a decade - that could qualify as a success story even today. In the 1820s however it was miraculous; in the milieu of the inflexible social patterns of Great Britain of the day, even brilliance in a profession could lead nowhere if you were of the wrong class.

But young David Douglas, the son of an unpretentious Scots stonemason (a craftsman and therefore of the lower class), defied convention and made it to the top in his chosen career in botany. In a few bewildering years, and by foot, canoe and horseback, across tens of thousands of miles of the North American continent, he collected thousands of plant specimens. His name is perhaps best remembered for the Douglas fir, but he discovered the California poppy and the lupine and more plant species were named in his honor than for any other person in the history of botany.

The observations in his journal, particularly about the Oregon Territory and the vast Mexican province of California, are perhaps more readable than ever today in view of current interest in ecology and wildlife; but strangely enough his journal remained unpublished by the Royal Horticultural Society until 1914 or 80 years after his death.

Author William Morwood, a landscape contractor and Californian, has put together an exciting adventure story, which is the life of Douglas, from the journal and from the works of other chroniclers of the period.

Douglas was a man who never relaxed and seemed incapable of doing so; his associates found him difficult to say the least. He was a perfectionist which produced a sort of neurosis and so he judged himself by his failures rather than his successes. Life was lived at high tension and it ended at the age of 35 in Hawaii - in a native cattle pit. An accident, perhaps, but it is possible that he did away with himself.

But measured by his successes we may think of him as his own generation thought of him, as a man of unique talents and restless energy to whom every lover of plants is indebted.

William Morwood has radio and television scripts to his credit, and he has written short stories for the New Yorker; and in 1970 Doubleday published his book - "The Lazy Gardener's Garden Book."

LAND OF THE COYOTE by Shirley Holmes Cochell, as told by George Holmes Beine; Iowa State University, 193 pages, price not stated. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

"As told to" and "as told by" biographies are usually unsatisfactory. Either the scribe labors too hard to try to reproduce the language of the subject, or he goes too literary.

"Land of the Coyote" is an exception. Either Shirley Holmes Cochell of Los Angeles had an exceptionally graphic narrator in her uncle, Ross resident George Holmes Beine, or she did an exceptionally fine job of arranging his recollections without losing any of the flavor of his own accounts — or both.

Beines' German father was Omaha representative for a flour mill when he yielded to the lure of "new land" in 1907 and moved his family to South Dakota to buy a "proved up" homestead which turned out to be more run down than proved up.

George was 14 years old, second of three sons (there also was a daughter, aged 6) of the family. "Land of the Coyote" tells of his next few years, when he worked as farmhand, horse trainer and ranchhand to augment the Beines family income in their new home.

The picture it gives of life on the high Dakota plains in the early years of the century is a highly personal one — but highly illuminating because of that.

"Land of the Coyote" is first-rate.

John Braine Novel Is For Relaxing— And For Studying

THE QUEEN OF A DISTANT COUNTRY by John Braine; Coward, McCann and Geoghegan, 252 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by James Meldrum.

Although John Braine insists that his central character, Tom Metfield, is a purely fictional novelist, there can be no denying that the author of "The Queen of a Distant Country" has inserted episodes that could only have come from direct personal experience. This is a novel that, like Braine's "Room at the Top," concerns itself with the agonies of a young man struggling for success.

The impressive evidence of an artist's honesty confronts us in this work, for only by being truthful could the author give us the pulsating essence that describes, retrospectively, Metfield's adolescent dreaming and the irony of the dream being realized.

Metfield, although not another Faust who would sell his soul for success, is an Oedipus in that he is obliged to pay homage to his surrogate mother who has already made her name in the literary world. It is this symbolic mother figure, Miranda, who gave the young Tom the map that set him on the road from obscurity in a small English town to the Bohemian world of literary London.

Aspiring writers, would-be novelists and even active artists would do well to read and heed the words of the mature Metfield as he explores and examines the exploits of his past 20 years. The complications that arise because of Miranda's seniority, her declining morality and her later lack of sexual scruples function, fortunately for Tom, as a barrier that prevents the consummation of what would have been a disastrous affair for this young naive man.

Braine's capacity for capturing authentic dialogue is put to excellent use in this novel. We see his characters through their speech rather than by how they look. By allowing the reader to hear the characters, he gives them a versatility that can be associated with, even paralleled by, the reader's own experience and imagination. The author does not impose upon us the usual painted stereotypes, but gives us instead the freedom to fill in, perhaps subconsciously, the gaps that he intentionally leaves in his characters' descriptions.

This author's talents, like his characters, are well worth studying. This is a good novel and will please anyone who likes easy relaxed reading. It is also an excellent source of study for those who have ever thought of putting pen to paper in any creative manner.

Villainess Or Victim?— The Reader Must Decide

This is a haunting love story, a recreation of a crime of passion actually committed in French Canada in the 1820s.

Elisabeth d'Aulnieres, youthful beauty, carefully educated, sheltered by widowed mother and maiden aunts, makes an apparently brilliant marriage with Antoine Tassy, handsome master of Kamouraska, heir to a vast estate in northern Quebec.

But Antoine, after the wedding and in his native habitat, turns out to be a madman who alternates loving tenderness with drunken abuse.

After bearing two children, Elisabeth retreats to her home village where she meets George Nelson, an American doctor dedicated to his practice among the poor and a gentle man who is the emotional opposite of Antoine.

The inevitable happens, with help from Elisabeth. She and Dr. Nelson have an affair and decide since divorce in this Catholic region is unthinkable, that Antoine must die.

They scheme, finally dupe a half-witted housemaid into attempting to poison Antoine. She fails. Then Elisabeth — pregnant with Dr. Nelson's child — convinces him to act.

From these rather banal circumstances, writer Anne Hebert has fashioned an impressionistic, stream-of-consciousness novel. Elisabeth tells her own story. We follow the twisted trails of guilt through her mind — years later — as she waits for her second husband (not Dr. Nelson) to die.

This is a woman's book. More than anything else, Elisabeth's plight points up the hopeless situation of unhappily married women in the early 19th Century. We see the desperation of a sensitive, intelligent woman — granted that she has the instincts of a femme fatale — trapped by society.

Is Elisabeth villainess or victim? Who can assess her guilt? Her second husband, a vicious little clerk to whom she has borne eight children? Dr. Nelson, who ended by cursing her? Her housemaid, who served a prison term? Elisabeth herself, who knows no peace?

Anne Hebert's evocation of the intellectual and geographic isolation of early-day Canada, and of the bloody burtality of murder amid these frozen wastes, is superb.

"For you (the Nazi leadership), human beings were no more than a means of feeding your insatiable lust for power. You have destroyed our culture with its hundreds of years of history; you have destroyed the German people. That is the terrible burden of guilt you bear!" General Burgdorf to Martin Bormann, as quoted in "Hitler: The Last Ten Days."

The Death Throes Of The Third Reich

By DON KEOWN

HITLER: THE LAST TEN DAYS by Gerhard Boldt; Coward, McCann and Geoghegan, 224 pages, $6.95.

The death of Adolf Hitler in his underground Berlin bunker even as his once vaunted "thousand-year Reich" disintegrated over his head has been an event in history fogged by mystery and confusion.

Finally, from a prosperous German wine merchant who in that momentous year of 1945 was first a member of Reinhard Gehlen's intelligence staff, and then aide-de-camp to Gens. Heinz Guderian and Hans Krebs, Hitler's last two chiefs of the army general staff, we have received the closest thing yet to an eye-witness report of the Hitler suicide.

Gerhard Boldt renders his report in two forms: In a book, "Hitler: The Last Ten Days," which he began in an Allied internment camp immediately after World War II while his memories were fresh, and which he has now expanded.

And in a motion picture of the same title, for which he served as technical adviser, and in which Alec Guinness portrays Hitler and Simon Ward is cast as a Captain Hoffman based upon the real Boldt.

In his army capacities, Boldt visited regularly the underground chambers of the Reich Chancellery where Hitler had holed up with Eva Braun in a mole-like existence. Boldt mingled with German bigwigs, military and Nazi Party alike, and attended a number of the death throe conferences presided over by the German dictator.

From his observations we get one of our better pictures of what Adolf Hitler was like in his final days. What Boldt saw and heard rebuts the movement of a few years back that questioned the assumption that Hitler was mad. The sinister and evil egomaniac whom Boldt watched raving and ranting, torn between alternating spells of deep depression and irrational optimism, had to be a lunatic. His so-called strategy was devoid of any touch with reality, often so absurd it could not be executed, almost always lethal to those who blindly still followed the orders of the Fuhrer.

We get a picture, too, of a suddenly much aged, physically broken man for whom not even madness could provide a total protection from the knowledge of the doom that he had made inescapable for himself and his people.

Adolf Hitler is one of the few figures in history for whom it is impossible to mount the slightest feelings of compassion, and one almost regrets he is denied a firsthand report of Hitler's death throes, although by then pain and disappointment might well have been masked completely by insanity. Boldt, however, does his best to fill us in on Hitler's last mad act, following so shortly after his theater-of-the-absurd marriage to Miss Braun.

Boldt introduces us, too, to the other principal players in the Reich's last hours — the ambitious Martin Bormann, the buffoon Hermann Goring, the sinister Josef Goebels, Himmler, Kaltenbrunner, Speer, Koch, Saur and the Generals Keitel, Jodl, Krebs, Guderian, Burgdorf and Von Greim. He shows most of them as a scheming, jealous and selfish pack, engaged in self-serving plots to advance their own fortunes, careful always not to roil their tantrum prone Fuhrer and adept at playing upon his vanities.

Along with giving us a picture of what it was like to share with Hitler and his motley crew those final days, and to providing insights into their character, or lack thereof, Boldt's book is noteworthy as a reflection at that critical time in world history.

Boldt, of course, was an early non-Nazi or anti-Nazi. (But weren't they all? One sometimes gets a picture of a half dozen men at most coercing millions of good and reluctant people into following their evil commands.)

More revealing and less self-serving are Boldt's feelings as defeat becomes certain and disillusionment sets in. His firsthand observations of Hitler's erratic, callous leadership causes him to fix the blame upon the Fuhrer. His distaste and distrust of the Nazi leadership becomes embittered. But what is noteworthy is that the crimes for which Boldt — and no doubt many other disgruntled Germans — indicts Hitler are those he has committed against his own people and country — not against humanity and its innocents.

Boldt is horrified when Hitler orders the flooding of Berlin's subways to delay the Russian approach, disregarding the safety of the thousands of Berliners who had taken refuge in the underground. No similar shock is expressed over the leveling of Warsaw or Rotterdam by terror bombs. He is disgusted by the manner in which Hitler sends Berlin youths to their deaths in a final hopeless defense of Berlin. But there is no mention of the thousands of yet younger Jews and other captives who died even more needlessly in German death camps. He is outraged by the German casualties attributable to Hitler's amateurish strategy and tactics, but forgetful of the millions of all nationalities, in and out of uniform, who had perished because, astonishingly, a nation overwhelmingly had accepted a madman's claim to infallibility.

Predictably, he makes frequent mention of alleged atrocities by the invading Russians, while neglecting or denying the earlier German barbarities that had infuriated the Soviet soldiers and provoked their vengeance.

"Hitler: The Last Ten Days," then, is a revealing book — revealing as to what occurred in the bunkers beneath Berlin in the spring of 1945, and revealing, too, of the thinking not only of the Nazi leadership, but of those who had followed such leaders to the brink of defeat and destruction. One of several recent books on Adolf Hitler and his reign of terror, it is probably the most revealing of all for that misty period of his downfall and death. Certainly it is more authentic than the motion picture of the same title, and supposedly based on the book. Advance excerpts shown on television indicate considerable cinematic license has been taken with the Boldt book by the film-makers.

TWO NEW books on astrology, for "Believers" or those with open minds: "Astrology for Skeptics" (Macmillan, $6.95) by Charlotte MacLeod, who claims her book began as a debunking of the practice and wound up a defense of it. "Properly understood and used, astrology is neither risky nor transitory in its effects," she claims. "It can carry you to a far more satisfactory high than any drug." And she continues with a detailed explanation of astrology and its relationship to day-to-day living.

"The History of Astrology" (Arco, $7.95) by Zolar, one of the world's best known astrologists and writers on the subject, tracing its development from man's dimmest early history down to its present popularity and including all the expected charts and illustrations.

"FROM ABIGAIL to Zoe, here are more than 1,000 girls' Christian names, giving their origins, sailient facts and whether they owe their existence and popularity to personal beauty — or to some idiosyncrasy or whim of our ancestors centuries ago." So promises the dust jacket for "Girls' Christian Names" by Helena Swan, published by Charles E. Tuttle at $5.50. Fun reading as well as a useful reference.

Sleuths & Suspense

English author Davies' latest work is something of a cross between a science fiction story and a good old-fashioned British mystery, with the latter theme gaining precedence in the end.

The tale is of a young man who one moment is sitting in his room at his boys' boarding school, trying to decide which of two paths into the future to take, and then suddenly finds himself five years' hence.

For Howell Trowman, who remembers well the events of his past except for the last five years finding himself is a difficult job. Old friends shun him, his life obviously has not been a financial success and worst of all, he turns out to be suspected of murdering his former school friends.

In his search for the truth, he is aided by an attractive young woman, to whom, most of the time, he reacts alternately as a 17-year-old and a 23-year-old.

The tale is suspenseful and has a most satisfactory ending and is an enjoyable mystery, although Davies at times writes in a manner that could stand a little more editing than it received.

Europe: It Will Cost You More In '73

There's nothing like travel to broaden the mind and — in this year of inflation and devaluation — to flatten the pocketbook.

Americans traveling in Europe and its environs will find costs 5 to 40 per cent higher than they were a year ago. And no one was giving away anything last year.

The increases are across the board. That is, almost everything is up in price — clothing, souvenirs, food and all the other things tourists and natives like to buy.

WHAT THIS MEANS is that the traveler must aim for value for his dollar, control his tipping, exchange his money at the best rates, take advantage of cheaper travel where such exists, and use a hotel that is at least as interested in giving good service as it is in collecting higher rentals.

Consider this wisdom from an experienced traveler, David Hagy, a United Press International correspondent currently headquartered in Bonn:

"The effect upon the American tourist of devaluation will be much tougher if the tourist does not heed this advice: change your money at a bank or your travelers check office, not at your hotel. A tourist typically will suffer about a 13.5 per cent devaluation of his dollar now as against pre-crisis rates. But he will absorb about a 21 per cent devluation if he takes the lazy route at the hotel desk.

IN DOLLAR AND cents terms a tourist family of four could easily waste at least $100 a week by taking hotel exchange rates."

Nagy has another tip if West Germany is on your itinerary: Instead of buying the usual dollar travelers checks and changing as you go, consult your banker about buying marks at a U.S. bank and transferring them to a German bank. When you get to Germany take your marks in German travelers checks.

There are two advantages: Your money is in Europe's most stable currency and avoids the exchange rates vagaries for the dollar at each border crossing, and the exchange rate for bank transfers is the best you can get.

IN LONDON, prices are about 12 per cent higher this year than last in terms of the dollar. Despite a number of new hotels it is still difficult to book into luxury or first class hotels where prices range from $20 to $35 single and from $25 to $45 double per day.

London has a very large number of fairly comfortable hotels in the middle grades and provided the tourist does not expect a lush lobby or haute cuisine these are the answer for the budget traveler. Prices range from under $5 for bed and breakfast spots to $12 a day for genuine hotels.

One cautionary note: some bed and breakfast places charge all rooms for double occupancy.

THE DOLLAR IS down about 10 per cent in purchasing value in France and menus with scratched out old prices are common. A bistro near the United Press International office suddenly upped the price of a bottle of Bordeaux from $1.80 to $3.10 and no one was surprised.

Paris accommodations cover all prices — you can camp in the Bois de Boulogne for about 50 cents or pay $50 a day and more at the Crillon. Paris hotels usually have rooms in June, July or August but are crowded in the spring and autumn.

Hotel rooms are always a problem in Rome and discerning travelers book well in advance. There are numerous small pensions at from $4.50 to $6.50 a day. At the other end is the Hilton at $24 single and $38 for the best double, with 21 per cent for service on top of that. A double at the elegant Grand or Excelsior will run $60 a day.

DOLLAR TRAVELERS in Spain will spend 18 per cent more than last year, half of it because of inflation, the other half because of devaluation. Hotel prices are up seven per cent and there are generally rooms available except at the very height of the summer season. In luxury establishments prices for a double with bath are about $35 a day, about half of that in a good hotel and about $9 in a decent motel or simple hotel. Singles work out at one-third less.

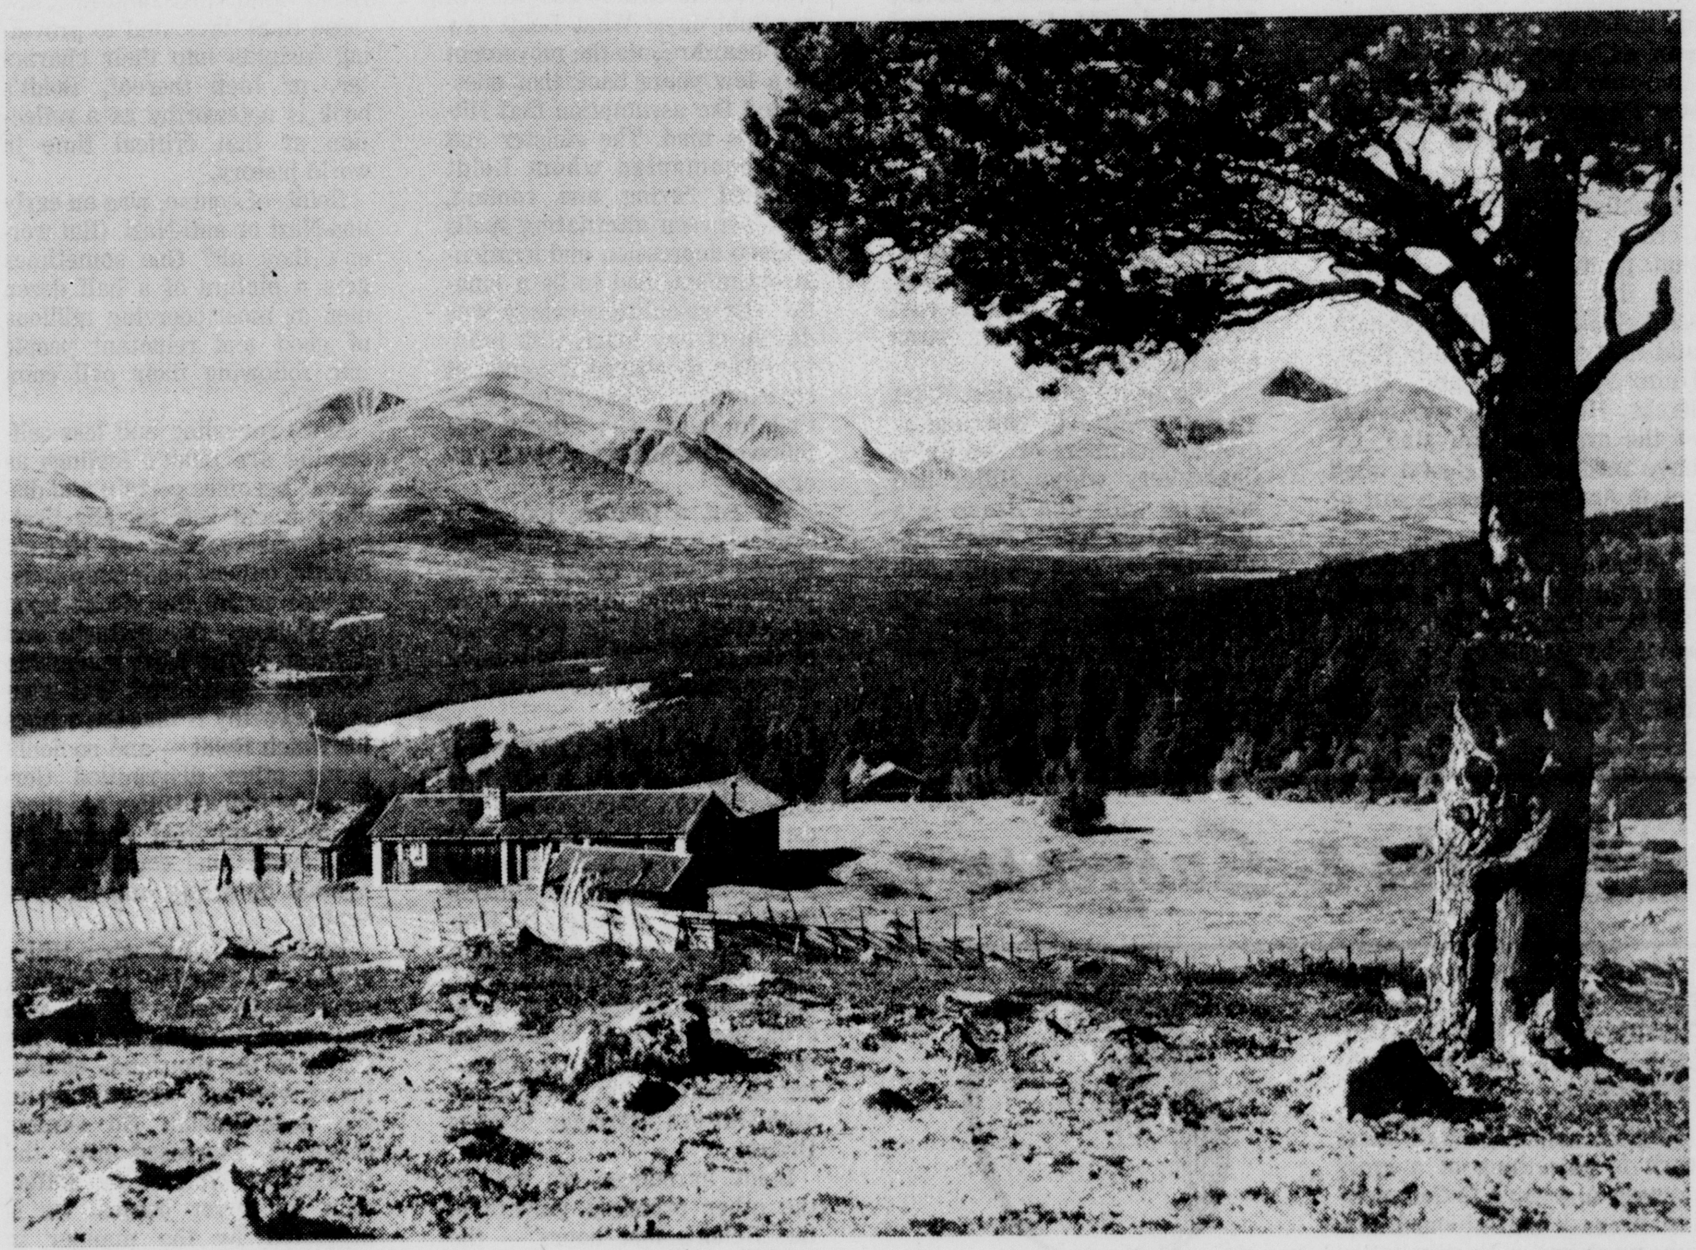
With devaluation cutting it by 9 per cent and with raging inflation it will buy some 30 per cent less than 18 months ago. Nevertheless, Vienna remains very popular and some hotels book two years in advance. The 500-room Intercontinental has been solidly booked for a year.

THE LESSON is: reserve early.

The only time a surprise visitor has a chance for a room is July or August when the two biggest tourist attractions — the Spanish Riding School and the Opera House — are closed.



THE UNUSUAL MOUNTAIN formations of Rondane National Park in Norway, with 10 peaks at higher than 6,000 feet, are an example of why the high country of Scandinavia holds such an attraction for Norwegians and foreigners alike. A bicycle trail at elevations up to 4,000 feet will open up the mountains to more adventurers.

Bicycle Trail Across The Roof Of Norway

The very first mountain trail for bicycles ever built in Europe is under construction in Norway. It stretches literally across the "Roof of Norway," since it runs across the Hardanger Mountain plateau at an elevation of up to 4,000 feet between Haugastol and Myrdal.

Equally remarkable is the international work gang that is building the road — because it is made up of young volunteers ages 18 to 35 years. They are strictly amateurs, but all are members of the youth hostel association in their own country.

The work gang consists of 75 members, both male and female, including some young Americans. The road project was started in 1971, and turned into such a popular venture that over 1,700 youngsters from 11 countries wanted to enrll last year.

Owing to the high altitude, the work camp is restricted to July and August only. The construction work is supervised by engineers from the Norwegian State Railways, and the young workers are accommodated in barracks on the Bergen railroad — the most scenic railway in Europe. Hot food is brought daily by train in special containers from Geilo Youth Hostel.

American and Canadian youth hostelers wishing to participate in 1973, should write before June 15 to the Norwegian Youth Hostel Assn., Dronningensgate 26, Oslo 1, Norway.

Information about many other unusual vacations in Norway is available from Scandinavian National Tourist Offices, 505 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y., 10017, and 3600 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, Calid., 90010.

The Museum That You Visit By Invitation Only

By JEFFREY ROBINSON

PARIS, France — Thierry Hermes was the official saddlemaker of the Russian czars some 150 years ago when his small shop was along the Boulevard Capucines.

Today his name is on the door of a large shop just down the block from the French president's Elysee Palace on the Faubourg Saint Honore. It is one of the world's most fashionable houses of leather. And the fourth floor is one of this city's "in" museums.

"It's not as if the museum is closed to the public," explains one of the smartly dressed, extremely attractive young hostesses who meets every customer at the front door. "It's just that access to the musuem is by invitation only. It's a very unique museum."

SHE SAYS AT one time it was open to the general public, but the museum's management started to find various pieces missing. Then again, this is the Faubourg Saint Honore, and the people who regularly shop along the street are more than used to having things exclusive and private. Neighbors of Hermes are the fashion houses which every season make top fashion news.

Although the collection was begun by Thierry Hermes, it was his grandson Emile who is largely responsible for the several hundred "'objets d'art" in the museum. He devoted so much time to collecting the pieces, and felt so dearly for them, that he turned the fourth floor into his office.

"It was about 70 or 75 years ago," the hostess goes on. "He worked and saw his customers here. And he decorated the place with his toys, you might say. Lots of them are involved with horses. There are several dozen saddles. And then he added such things as a pair of stirrups that was once used by Napoleon. He also has a bit that was handmade in the 8th Century B.C. in Louristan, near Persia."

BESIDES A number of saddles bearing the mark of his grandfather, Emile Hermes added to the collection a very rare Persian saddle that is in at least 10 different colors and dripping with rare gems. Sitting not far from it is a saddle from Japan, handcrafted in wood.

"I guess after saddles, Monsieur Hermes liked travel cases best," the guide says, pointing to the several heavy leather cases, most about the size of a small suitcase.

They contain trays of items that make up just about anything and everything anyone could ever have wanted to take on a trip. Popular with the very rich during the last century they are jammed with mirrors, combs, toothbrushes, glasses, hair brushes, small vials, boot horns, and any number of strange-looking things whose uses have been lost to time.

"The very special travel cases," she says, "were designed by a French artist in the early 1800s named Biennais. Each one of his cases was completely different. There are several here, and you can see that no two are even remotely alike. He never built the same travel case twice. The only thing the same about them is that they are very heavy. I'm not sure how much they weigh, but I can't lift one.

"THEN AGAIN, I guess if you could afford to buy one, you could also afford to have somebody carry it for you."

Another case, against a wall, is a large leather box that, after pressing the right place, unfolds into a cot. They were common, it seems, with British officers during the wars in India. Servants carried them so the officers fighting the battles didn't have to sleep on the ground.

"They look very uncomfortable," the young French hostess says. "But just the idea of them; it's really very British."

One of the items that is nothing short of "very French" is a powder horn that belonged to one of the three musketeers.

"Everyone asks which one," she nods. "And very honestly, I don't have any idea."

At the other end of the office museum is the large leather desk that Emile Hermes used. Next to that are two bookcases. The one onthe left would fascinate almost anyone as it is filled with old and rare books, most of them bound in leather. Some of the books contain original maps and etchings of 17th and 18 Century Paris.

At first glance, the bookshelf next to it looks like it might contain a similar type of collection. On the second and closer glance, it can be seen that the books are not books at all, but rather "fronts." One of them pulls out, and the whole shelf easily slides away, revealing a passage out of the office.

"This is my favorite," the guide says. "Today it only leads to the hallway. But secret doors are very romantic. The idea is very daring, and I'm certain it didn't lead to just anything way back then. Who knows what was really back there when it was built?"

A Big Year For Vacation Campers

By WILLIAM LAFFLER

All estimates are that more Americans than ever will choose camping vacations this year. It has become a holiday way of life for Americans of all ages.

There's no doubt about it, camping can be fun. And it can save money at the same time. But the wise would-be camper plans ahead.

Nothing can be more frustrating than to pull into a campground at twilight and be told that it is "filled up." Usually another campground is not within easy driving distance, so the family has to put up at a motel and hope for better luck the next day.

Each year, as the number of campers has multiplied, more campgrounds have been constructed. But there still are not enough to take care of the peak vacation-time load.

Campers should always plan ahead by mapping their trip and making reservations for overnight stops, especially in mid-summer. It is wiser to go camping before the Fourth of July and after Labor Day when campgrounds are less crowded.

Outdoor camping has many things to recommend it. It is much more economical for a family of four or five to spend a vacation camping than at a resort. Most campgrounds charge less than $4 a night, including electric hookups. Some camps offer free movies or activities such as hayrides and hiking expeditions.

There are drawbacks. Rain can spoil a day in a camp. So can bees and mosquitoes. But veteran campers get used to bad weather and insects.

Many newcomers will go camping this year if for no other reason than to fight inflation and the higher cost of living. Some of them will foolishly buy recreation vehicles and find at the end of the season that they really don't like camping after all.

Recreation vehicles are ideal for big families who plan to spend every vacation on the road. The more expensive models have toilets, showers and bathtubs built in and they pay for themselves in five years or less.

The beginning camper should hold off on a recreation vehicle and start with a tent, which will pay for itself in savings in one summer. Fancy tents are expensive, but sturdy and roomy ones can be purchased for less than $100.

Before going on the first camping trip, the father of the family should set up the tent in his backyard, or plan an afternoon outing in a place where the tent can be erected. The beginner should never wait until he gets to the campsite to put up a tent for the first time.

The original outlay also should include sleeping bags and cots, flashlights and lanterns, a propane stove, pots and pans, paper plates, a habachi and charcoal, insect repellants and first aid kits.

Tents should be pitched on fairly level ground. A slight slope is preferable because rain will drain away from the tent.

It is not necessary to buy a refrigerator because plastic ice chests will serve the same purpose. Block ice will last much longer than cubes or crushed ice.

A camper should be able to tell at the end of his first trip whether he enjoys this kind of living. Then he can put his money in a recreation vehicle.

The Bighorn Sheep's Last Resort

THE MAJESTIC SIGHT of the rare desert bighorn sheep is a delight that can be experienced by the visitor to the wild mountainous area that surrounds the resort city of Palm Springs, Calif., and can be enjoyed few places else upon this earth. More easily observed are two of the handsome animals being kept, pampered and studied in Palm Springs' Living Desert Reserve.

Construction crews, who are pushing a new highway through the Santa Rosa Mountains above the community have now grown accustomed to the presence of bighorn sheep. Crewmen say the animals will squat for hours at a time atop a nearby rock outcropping, from which vantage point they watch the road's progress.

Several bighorns were also on hand to observe the building of a new million-dollar tennis facility.

And because of the sheeps' long-established affinity with the general Palm Springs area, Atajo, a 45,000-acre land development area, here, has "adopted" the animal. The head of a ram has become the symbolical representation of the organization.

IT IS NOT uncommon here for people traveling mountain highways to catch a glimpse of a spiral-horned ram silhouetted atop a distant ridgeline. The rare sheep also are seen from the famed Palm Springs Aerial Tramway. This mountain "people-mover" carries visitors from near sea level to the 8,500 foot level of Mt. San Jacinto. Horseback riders who travel trails into the scenic Indian Canyons also have spotted the sheep.

Karen Fowler, comely director-naturalist of the giant Living Desert Reserve, said the Palm Springs area harbors the largest population of bighorn in all of California.

"There are approximately 400 to 500 of the rare sheep in the Santa Rosa Mountain range," she says. "In California it is illegal to hunt or possess the animals. But the sheep are still faced with extinction."

SHE EXPLAINED that although the animals are fully protected by state laws their main threat is man, as he begins to develop areas that were formerly inhabited by the sheep. But to prevent the sheep from taking other refuge, conservation-minded developers in Palm Springs have begun to do something about it.

Owners of the Thunderbird Country Club, for example, have set aside a section of their posh, exclusive property for the sheep, constructing a water hole for the animals' exclusive use.

Mrs. Fowler said study of the rare sheep indicates that they will seldom use water holes other than their own. The Thunderbird water hole is a rare success story in itself, she said.

DEVELOPERS OF the extensive Atajo project have allocated large areas of open space to allow the sheep their full range of movement. The behavior patterns of the sheep are being studied in an effort to determine their watering places, lambing areas and vantage points. Major developers have indicated agreement not to disturb such areas.

Because of the bighorn sheep's threatened extinction, two of the animals have been transported from their habitat to the Living Desert Reserve.

The reserve opened in 1970 for educational purposes and the preservation of the desert landscape. The sheep are under constant study by biologists from the University of California at Riverside.

A NATURAL mountainous area within the reserve has been provided for the sheep, where they can roam freely in familiar surroundings.

Lloyd Tevis, associate specialist, says the research site provides the public the rare opportunity to see bighorns at close range. "Very few persons see them in the wild, and the law doesn't allow them to be captured for display purposes," he added.

Tevis said the ram was trapped as a lamb and promptly named Little Britches. He's learning to approach students who work at the Living Desert Reserve.

THE TAMER of the two is Gumdrops, his older and smaller mate. Gumdrops goes to her human friends at the reserve, eats from their hands and seems to enjoy having her head scratched. Found after she had been injured by an automobile, she was cared for by a game warden until her recovery.

Biologist Jack Turner, who is in charge of the bighorn sheep project, said the primary function of the observation at the reserve is to find out how much range an individual sheep requires, its reproduction habits and the best way to acclimate it to a new environment.

Bighorn sheep in the Palm Springs area are found at elevations between 2,000 and 4,000 feet. According to naturalists, the sheep population here seems to be fairly stable.

A LARGE, striking animal measuring 60 inches long, the desert bighorn weighs up to 200 pounds. Equipped with extraordinary mountaineering abilities, the bighorn can bound up and down cliffs and calmly negotiate smooth, slippery rock.

The secret of the bighorn's ability is its hoofs, which have tough, pliable outer shells and soft rubbery inner pads. These pads act as shock absorbers and will grip any surface, according to Turner.

There are few things more heartwarming in the mountains surrounding Palm Springs than a glimpse of the bighorn lambs.

Bouncing about, playing "king of the castle," they can be as playful and entertaining as their domestic counterparts.

No one knows how or why the sheep came to the sun-drenched desert area, unless it was for the same reason as their human counterparts: serenity and, of course, the year-around sunshine.

'Round Marin

CHILDREN of the Ukraine twirl their scarves in a dance of welcome at a youth camp near Chernovtsy in this scene from Clay Francksco's feature-length color film, "Czechoslovakia and the Ukraine," to be shown by the producer Monday at 8:15 p.m. in Veterans' Memorial Building, Civic Center, San Rafael, as the final attraction in the 1972-73 Explorama Series. The film records a 5,000-mile motor journey through Eastern Europe's legendary kingdoms of Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia (now comprising Czechoslovakia), and the Ukraine (now part of the Soviet Union). Francisco was formerly associated with Time and Life magazines, and has traveled to more than 40 countries, making motion pictures that have earned him a citation from the American Film Festival in New York. He will personally narrate the Monday night showing of his picture, highlighted by a performance of the Ukrainian Folk Opera.

In Praise Of The Exotic Pomegranate

An exotic fruit well-known in Mexico, Asia and the Middle East and only now gaining new friends in the United States is the pomegranate.

Pomegranate trees have been grown in the garden in the past for their decorative appearance. The fruit gives color to the home at Thanksgiving and Christmas, yet it has many uses. People in the Middle East, especially Turks, Armenians and Greeks, marinate lamb and other meats with the juice. In Mexico they make a punch adding the pomegranate seed.

We in the U.S. have not taken to the pomegranate because of our lack of knowledge of its culinary qualities. For most people, the fruit has too many seeds, yet the red juice and the seeds have a piquant, bitter-sweet tang.

THE POMEGRANATE trees seem to live forever and they are probably the longest living fruit trees, some as old as 200 years. Homer mentioned them in the "Odyssey" and they appear in the Bible and in "Arabian Nights."

A pomegranate is a semi-tropical tree and will stand almost any amount of heat, but is injured by temperatures dropping below 15 degrees F and when the freezing is of long duration. It does well in California, and in Florida, Arizona, Texas and most of the southern states where no snow falls.

Pomegranates will tolerate a saline soil such as few other trees can. Buy a tree that is two to three years old. Dig a wide hole, two feet deep. Well-spaded soil helps the growth. The tree is usually pest free and no spraying is necessary. It should be fertilized in late winter with a general balanced fertilizer, and again in the spring.

THE TINY SHOOTS that come up at the base should be cut away in January or February. Plant the dwarf pomegranate variety for decorative purposes only as it bears small unedible fruit.

From spring through early summer the hibiscus-like flowers of the pomegranate tree give a blaze of color. As the fruit gets larger and ripens the trees present a spectacular oriental appearance. Do not over water. In summer, water once a month or every six weeks.

For use in cooking, cut the pomegranate in half and scoop juice and seeds into the blender. Run the blender until there is a free running juice. Strain. Marinate lamb or other meats with it. It not only tenderizes the meat but gives it a special flavor.

THE JUICE CAN be kept in a glass jar or bottle in the refrigerator for weeks and even months without spoiling, or it can be frozen.

A way to avoid the bitter taste of the seeds is to roll the fruit until soft and cut a hole in the blossom end and squeeze as much juice out as possible.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

✓Plant Hibiscus now for bloom through the summer months. Give them lots of sun, a rich soil and plenty of moisture.

✓Feed roses very soon, if you haven't already done so. Cut faded blooms before they go to seed.

✓Periwinkle, salvia and cockscomb are a trio of bedding plants to set-out in summer hot spots, where they'll add a refreshing touch to the surroundings.

TOMATO VINES IN THE KITCHEN

Dr. Virgin suggests that tomatoes can be grown in the kitchen, living room or den. Here are some tips if you want to try:

SOIL: Buy it at a nursery — it's inexpensive and disease-free. If you simply cannot bring yourself to pay for it, get some from a friend's garden and bake it in your oven for three hours at 200 degrees. The heat will kill any harmful fungi. But be careful. Too much heat will turn valuable organic material to ash.

Put the soil in an eight-inch clay pot, water it well and let it sit for a day or two before planting.

SEED: Dr. Virgin recommends five standard varieties which are suited to reduced sunlight conditions: Tiny Tim, Small Fry, Patio, Ace and Manapal. All are available through nurseries and seed catalogues.

The first three are dwarfs advertised for ornamental value as well as the quality of their cherry-size fruit. The Ace and Manapal are full-size tomato plants and will require a good deal of growing room.

PLANTING AND thinning: Punch three or four holes about three-fourths of an inch deep into the soil and place a seed in each. Cover and water. Shoots will appear in five to 10 days. It's a rule of green thumb to wait until the seedlings are three inches tall before thinning down to one per pot.

Be sure to place the plant where it will get the most sun. Anchor a trellis near its base so vines will have support later when fruit begins to set.

POLLINATION: Tomato plants are self-pollinating; you'll need no bees. However, in the windless environment of your home, it won't hurt to give Mother Nature assistance. As each flower becomes fully developed, flick the vine near it a few times. This will dislodge pollen.

SOME ADDITIONAL advice from Dr. Virgin:

If you smoke wash your hands before handling the plant. Many tobaccos harbor a destructive virus which can be transmitted easily to your tomato plant. Don't overwater.

THE POURING of a cement patio is not a project to be undertaken lightly. Still, it is a job easily within the capabilities of the average home handyman — given a little expert guidance. For that guidance, send $2 to Steve Ellingson, Independent-Journal Pattern Department, Post Office Box 2383, Van Nuys, Calif., 91409, and ask for Pattern 514. Include your zip code number. You will get instructions plus step-by-step drawings, not only for the patio, but for the block wall as well. Covered are such vital factors as estimating materials, concrete formulas, setting forms, footings, troweling, curing, flagstone marking, even curbs and steps. Then if you want to go further and complete your patio setting, you can also order Pattern 162 for the cement block barbecue, $1; Pattern 182 for the double chaise, $1; Pattern 174, the single chaise, $1, and Pattern 62, the barbecue dining set, $1. All you need then for outdoor living and dining is your own recipe for the barbecue sauce. For that, you will have to turn to your favorite cookbook.

INSIDE YOUR HOME: A New Look For Twin Beds

By CAROLYN MURRAY

Getting tired of twin beds that look the same day in and day out?

There is a monotony to twin beds; you can arrange them in just so many positions —especially if space is rather limited.

There's one new idea for you to try in the bedroom illustrated today. It was planned by interior designer Lee Bailey, and doesn't take a big investment in carpentry or furniture — just bed linens!

THE DESIGNER suggests you buy some ordinary molding (or not-so-ordinary molding) at the building-supply dealer's or hardware store. There are many different designs available as stock items. Try to match existing molding, but if that's not possible, find a compatible type.

Paint the new molding before you nail it to the ceiling at right-angles over each bed, as shown.

Designer Bailey then used a coordinated line of bedding to make a mock canopy. It is Springmaid's Bed-Lib collection and is 50 per cent Kodel polyester and 50 per cent cotton — and even has a Scotchgard finish.

THE SHEETS and pillowcases have blue-green bordered hems that are described as French cuffs, so they're a natural for this kind of installation.

The forsythia-colored sheets were chosen to create hanging panels at four corners of each bed. These are lined with a pink-purple floral, called Water Flowers, and they match the top sheets and pillowcases. Another forsythia-colored sheet was used to create a skirt for each bed, with the border positioned to match the French cuff effect on the curtain panels.

It's a very smart look and, best of all, it's totally machine washable. The Scotchgard finish allows you to use the curtain panels a lot longer than the sleep surfaces before laundering.

ANOTHER CLEVER device is the use of French-cuffed pillowcases as window blinds. These have been slit to make them useful as long vertical pieces of fabric, then flaps or pleats have been stitched into them to create a bit of interest. Again the blue-green border motif works as a decorative notion.

With a few potted plants, a floral painting or two, this newly dressed room is an altogether effective interior, day in, day out; night in, night out.

A Wall-Full Of Storage

Got a storage problem? Develop a hang-up.

This hang-up is a storage wall created with perforated hardboard panels. Brackets on which to mount shelves and hooks from which to hang items, fit into the perforations. The panels are easily installed over furring strips attached to the existing wall. One panel, or a wall-full, provides as much storage space as you need.

TO STAIN OR NOT TO STAIN?

There's Freedom Of Choice In Finishing Redwood Project

By ANDY LANG

The continuing use of redwood in patio furniture, porches, fences, house siding and garden structures calls attention to the great freedom of choices in the way it can be finished — or left the way it is.

If untreated, redwood will change color, sometimes achieving a variety of shades over the years.

Exactly which colors cannot always be accurately determined, since there are a number of factors affecting both the transitional and eventual permanent appearance. Generally, however, it can be assumed that redwood kep outside in a dry climate will turn a silvery-tan, getting lighter and lighter over the years.

IN A DAMP or humid area, redwood will darken fairly quickly, but frequent rinses from the rain will gradually turn it into a soft gray. That's why a fence, subject to these rain rinsings, will become gray in time, but an object made of redwood 10 or 15 feet away which is sheltered from both rain and sun will get darker and stay that way.

In my own experience with redwood, I have favored the use of a water repellent. It retains the natural texture and grain of the wood, slows down any tendency to fading and adds an extra measure of preservative to the already natural resistance of redwood to decay and ravages of weather. It is exceptionally easy to apply with a brush, immediately sinking into the wood.

Many persons swear by pigmented stain, especially the type that imparts a richer red color to the wood.

THE STAIN IS not like paint. That is, it does not cover the wood. But it tends to obscure the grain at first, a condition that disappears as the finish weathers.

One advantage of both the water repellent and the stain is that the wood is easy to refinish when it becomes necessary.

Still another way of treating redwood is with a bleach. This is done when you want the wood to turn to the driftwood gray that it might take years to achieve by natural weathering.

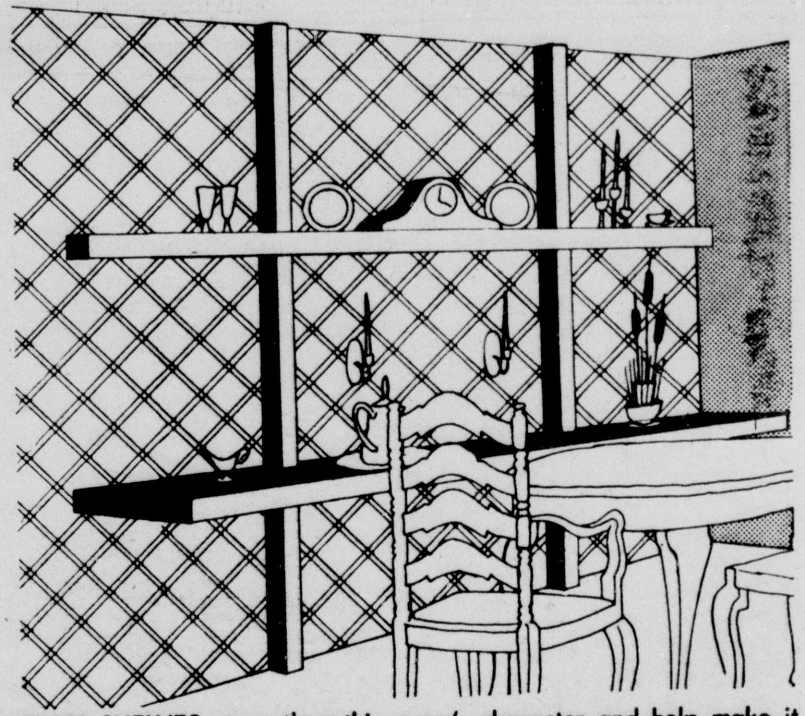
On new wood, one base and two finish coats are recommended, using an oil-based primer as the base coat. I have seen some beautifully finished redwood siding, but I must admit that I have a weakness for redwood in its natural state and would never consider painting it.

NO MATTER which finish you use, some attempt should be made to keep it from drying too quickly.

One way to do this is to keep the object being finished out of the sun. When this cannot be done — as in the case of a fence, for instance — apply the finish during the coolest part of the day.



HEAVY SHELVES strengthen this room's character and help make it the perfect place for informal dining. Posts of four-by-four-inch wood over boldly-patterned wallpaper hold four-by-four-inch eye-level display shelf, while a lower four-by-12-inch shelf doubles as a sideboard, buffet seating, writing desk and craft work area.

Planks Lend Character To Dining Area

Distinction can be added to a modest dining alcove to create a special, comfortable mood often lacking in less formal areas.

Many homes don't have a separate dining room, but dining in or near the kitchen still can be accomplished with style.

If the area reflects the good tastes of the family, it's likely also to give pleasure to company.

FIRST, AN unfussy wallpaper will add pattern to the shelf wall, or paint can be applied to complement the furnishings.

The main shelf, about 30 inches off the floor, is one four-by-12 inch plank or eight two-by-fours nail-laminated on edge. To be used as a sideboard and even for extra places for buffets, it must be set on sturdy brackets.

Vertical four-by-four inch posts extend from floor to ceiling, two or three depending on length of shelves. An upper shelf, set at eye level for display of prized china or nicknacks, is of the same four-by-four lumber.

Posts can be cut or notched, but the shelf should have a continuous appearance. Lag screws set deep in shelf and posts to fasten to wall studs look neater than brackets.

WESTERN SOFTWOODS, such as fir, pine or hemlock, are well-suited for the shelf system, and will take any finish well. Stain can be matched to the furniture or with certain backgrounds and furnishings a stark white painted finish is effective.

This shelf arrangement also can be used as a desk for school or office homeowrk, writing letters and paying bills, or for hobbies and crafts.

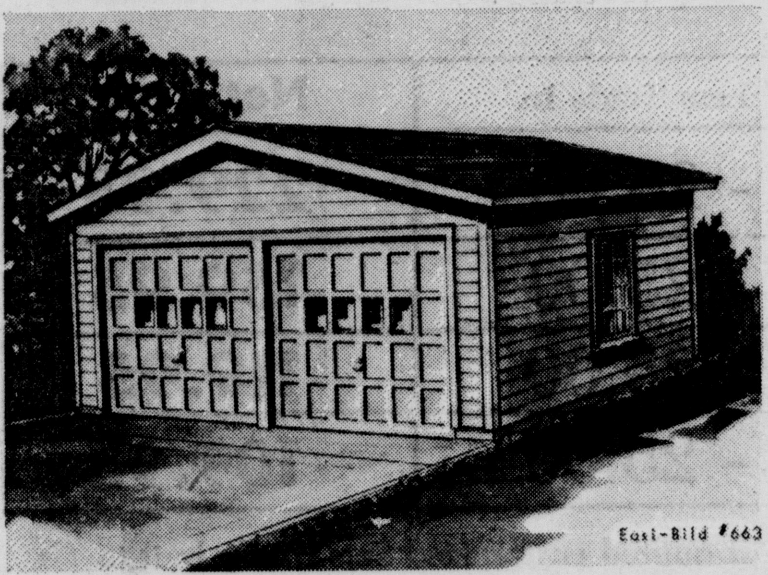
If the dining area directly adjoins the kitchen, it can be made more intimate in several ways — a dropped ceiling or lattice of one-by-twos over the table, a decorative screen of wood slats or dowels, or island counters that divide and serve both areas.

MAKING THE HOME SAFE

Protecting a home and its occupants against fire and intrusion is covered in a newly published 26-page booklet which includes a personal property inventory on which the reader may list pertinent information including make, model and serial number of cameras, appliances and other valuables.

Entitled "Safe at Home," the booklet is available for 25 cents from ADT, Box 325, New York, N.Y., 10013.

SHELTER FOR YOUR TWO CARS



DONALD R. BRANN and his Easi-Bild Pattern Co. are the sources of a book, "How to build a Two-Car Garage," that they promise will enable the average home handyman to build his own shelter for the family automobiles. For the book, send $1.50 to Independent-Journal pattern department, Easi-Bild, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., 10510, specifying the book by title and by number — 663. You will receive step-by-step directions, more than 50 illustrations, a materials list, plus instruction on site selection, building permits, excavating foundation trenches, etc. The finished garage measures 20 by 24 feet, enough for the power mower and other equipment along with the cars.

BUTCH PATRICK, as Bumper, an orphan boy who has found a new home on a sheep farm, patiently and tenderly feeds a lamb in a scene from "The Young Loner," a two-part adventure drama to begin Sunday at 7:30 p.m. on Channels 3 and 4 on "The Wonderful World of Disney."

TELEVISION NOTES

By JACK GAVER

A two-hour version of Alexandre Dumas' famed novel, "The Count of Monte Cristo," is in NBC's future. The show will be filmed in Europe.

ABC's fall schedule will contain a half-hour animated show, "The MAD Magazine TV Special," based on various satirical elements of that zany publication.

The title role in "Lisa, Bright and Dark," a "Hallmark Hall of Fame" drama for NBC next season, will be played by 19-year-old Kay Lenz. Anne Baxter and John Forsythe play the parents of a 17-year-old girl gradually slipping into mental illness.

Two CBS daytime serials, "As the World Turns" and "The Edge of Night," are now in their 18th year on the netowrk. Both made their debuts on April 2, 1956.

Charles M. Schulz will be the grand marshal of the 1974 Rose Bowl Parade in Pasadena, Calif. The father of the "Peanuts" cartoon strip will have to guard against being over-shadowed by that pushy beagle, Snoopy.

The baseball season on television has been made brighter by NBC's hiring of Joe Garagiola to do 15 pre-game shows preceding the network's prime-time major league baseball games on Monday nights. The old catcher does his first show on May 21.

There Are Almost As Many Chopins As There Are Pianists

By WILBUR LANDREY

Frederic Chopin appeals to the imagination as the long-haired young romantic of the 19th Century who not only wrote all that wonderful music but also was able to be considerably involved with a lady named George Sand before he died, coughing, over the piano keys.

Well, it was something like that, but not entirely. And the music has the rich harmony and melody that sings louder and with more color than even the legend.

Chopin has always been a concert and recording favorite for pianists. Listening to three of the latest recordings makes clear that there are, in fact, almost as many Chopins as pianists.

Gary Graffman's Chopin, for example, is no effeminate youth languishing over the keys in a 19th Century drawing room. In his latest Chopin recording — his first, the jacket says, in more than a decade — Graffman gives us a vigorous, bold and sure Chopin without sacrificing a note (Columbia M 31934). He plays two preludes, including the "Raindrop", the Scherzo 2, Ballade No. 1, the Andante Spianato and Grande Polonaise, and two Nocturnes.

There is also the Chopin of Stephen Bishop, a Chopin lighter in tone and also older in years, for the selections on Bishop's Chopin imported record (Philips 6500 393) are from the composer's later years, from 1841 until his death in 1849 at the age of 39.

Bishop is one of the better young pianists recording, and this recording confirms it. He plays the "Polonaise-Fantaisie" in A Flat, three mazurkas, an impromptu, a barcarolle and two nocturnes.

Finally, on the Seraphim label there is a record entitled "Great Pianists of the Century Play Chopin" — mostly the familiar, favorite Chopin (60207).

There is the wonderful Chopin of Arthur Rubinstein playing two nocturnes in 1936. Alfred Cortot plays the "Raindrop" in 1933, the Funeral March in 1953.

And there are the different Chopins of Witold Malcuzynski, Shura Cherkassky, Claudio Arrau, Vladimir Horowitz, Geza Anda, Dinu Lipatti and Walter Gieseking, all of pianistic fame.

In a record of selections played from 1933 to 1959, the sound is bound to be uneven, but this is one to have for its variety of insights into Chopin.

ALEKSANDER NICOLAEVICH Scriabin (1872-1915) was a strange Russian genius who saw sound in color synesthesia, was engrossed in theosophy and believed his music was part of some greater pattern of things to come.

His piano music has been undergoing a revival in recent years, and the young Soviet pianist, Igor Zhukov, has recorded all 10 of Scriabin's piano concertos. Records two and three have just been released in this country by Melodiya-Angel (SR-40217 and SR-40218). The first release in the series was SR-40191.

There are several other interpretations of all of them available but the new set is welcome.

It makes a lovely wedding gift.

Volkswagen has come up with a way for you to get a Volkswagen — or at least a part of one — as a wedding gift.

Just go to your participating VW dealer and register for a Volkswagen — the same way you'd register at a department store for china or silver.

Then your friends and relatives can buy a fender or steering wheel or windshield wiper or whatever part of the car suits their budget. (And they don't have to bother about gift wrapping what they buy. We'll present it to you right on the car.)

Depending on the size and generosity of your guest list, you could end up with a nice down payment on — or all of — a Volkswagen.

Which is a lot more practical than nine silver trays, six toasters, four blenders and seven whatchamacallits.

See your VW dealer now for all the details.

With a little luck you could drive off on your honeymoon in your very own Volkswagen. And that's a smart way to travel down the road of life.

Johnny Carson's New Life Style: 'More Relaxed'

By VERNON SCOTT

In place of a fashionable apartment in Manhattan, Johnny lives in a large, rambling Bel Air mansion with swimming pool.

Each morning he enjoys batting some tennis balls against the garage for exercise, a treat that was denied him in New York. He admits he would have bought a place with a tennis court except that it would have attracted friends and relatives from far corners of the world.

"LIFE IS A little more relaxed here," he says. "You have to be careful you don't become apathetic."

There's little chance of Carson turning loafer.

He drives to NBC's Burbank studios five days a week at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. The trip takes him about 20 minutes, or the same time it took to cover one-tenth that distance in Manhattan by cab.

He tapes his show from 6-7:30 p.m. with a live audience, most of whom are people on vacation or Hollywood visitors. Carson says if he taped his audience in the afternoon the people might be less sophisticated.

HE INITIATED Johnny Carson Apparel three years ago. His suits and sports jackets and shirts are sold at 1,500 retail stores across the country —and doing well.

Carson is home in plenty of time for dinner which sometimes is cooked by his wife, Joanna. But there is plenty of help in their new home which, curiously, is somewhat more formal than most Southern California homes.

It gives the appearance of a New York apartment, with a few antiques here and there.

JOHNNY CARSON
Still no loafer

Brezhnev To Meet Nixon Next Month

Kissinger Says Summit To Be 'Working' One

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Soviet Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev will hold a summit conference with President Nixon during an official visit to the United States from June 18-26, the White House announced today.

Henry A. Kissinger, Nixon's top national security adviser and just back from a trip to Moscow, said the Brezhnev visit would be "an overwhelmingly working summit" aimed at a breakthrough in U.S.- Soviet arms control talks and completion of new agreements in agricultural research, oceanography, scientific and cultural exchanges.

Kissinger said that Brezhnev was expected to spend about 90 per cent of his time in Washington, but that he also would visit the West Coast, possibly the Western White House at San Clemente, Calif.

Kissinger said Brezhnev was expected to be accompanied by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and other senior aides.

President Nixon had invited Brezhnev and the other top Soviet leaders, President Nikolai V. Podgorny and Soviet Prime Minister Alexei N. Kosygin, to the United States during his summit meeting in Moscow a year ago.

Neither Kosygin nor Podgorny was expected to accompany Brezhnev. All three Soviet leaders rarely leave Moscow at the same time.

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler announced the Brezhnev trip in an official statement which was released simultaneously in Washington and Moscow. It said:

"At the invitation of President Nixon extended by him at Moscow in May, 1972 and in accordance with subsequent agreements, General Secretary Brezhnev will pay an official visit to the United States from June 18-June 26, 1973."

The Day The 'Earthquake' Hit Marin

By ERIK M. INGRAM

Marin County's first "live action" emergency-disaster drill — involving hundreds of local residents — was staged yesterday with mixed reports of its success in the field. (See other stories, pictures, page 28.)

The exercise was held to test the county's ability to provide emergency medical services in case of disaster — in this case a simulated earthquake with a magnitude of 6.0 on the Richter scale.

Frank Kirby, county coordinator of emergency services, said late yesterday that results on how effectively local medical personnel had responded would not be clear until Monday when observers fully assess the test.

However, preliminary assessments of the exercise indicated a need for more ambulance service and better communications — especially to West Marin.

Called exercise MOHAMED — meaning Marin Operational Area Health and Medical Emergency Services Division — the drill primarily was designed to test the response of local physicians, nurses, hospitals and ambulance companies to disaster. Local police and fire departments also were involved.

A total of 150 casualties, played by high school and College of Marin students, was reported in three locales: San Rafael High School, where 75 feigned injury; a West Marin bus crash hurting 25 and Hill Junior High School in Novato, where 50 simulated a variety of grotesque injuries.

The seriously injured were rushed by ambulance, truck and helicopter to Novato, Marin and Ross general hospitals and Kaiser Foundation Hospital.

Also involved were the county schools office and the school districts of Novato, San Rafael, Tamalpais and Shoreline.

Other jurisdictions participating were the cities of Belvedere, Fairfax, Larkspur, San Anselmo, Mill Valley, Novato, San Rafael, Sausalito and Tiburon.

As first word of the simulated earthquake and disasters reached Kirby's Emergency Operations Center at the Marin Civic Center, county health and medical officials began coordinating the two-hour exercise.

Dr. Theodore D. Hiatt, chief of county medical services, released four nine-man medical teams to the emergency scenes. They were made up of private physicians, dentists, nurses and veterinarians.

It was also his job to dispatch ambulances and coordinate delivery at hospitals, depending on the number they said they could handle.

After the initial report of the bus accident north of Point Reyes Station, communications were lost, setting that portion of the exercise back about a half hour, according to Kirby.

Meanwhile, reports trickled in from San Rafael High indicating some dead and 32 persons needed hospitalization.

It was not until 2:26 p.m., 26 minutes after the exercise started, that the first doctor arrived at the school. Minutes later a second doctor showed.

The first ambulance from San Rafael arrived at Marin General at 3:05 p.m., an hour after the earthquake supposedly brought part of the school cafeteria crashing down on students.

"One hour late, that's not too sharp," said Dr. Hiatt.

With no word coming from West Marin, Kirby released a preplanned helicopter from Hamilton Air Force Base to pick up five injured. Minutes later, West Marin requested the helicopter. It arrived at Marin General about an hour behind schedule.

The Novato portion of the exercise appeared to operate the most smoothly with 50 victims sorted, identified and treated or rushed to hospitals

Gray Reportedly Gave Nixon Warning

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray has told Senate attorneys he warned President Nixon last July that White House aides were interfering with the Watergate investigation, according to reports published today.

Nixon told a national television audience April 30 that, until two months ago, he was unaware of any "effort to conceal the facts."

The reports, published in three newspapers and aired by ABC, said Gray also told investigators for the Senate Watergate committee that exWhite House aide John Ehrlichman "inhibited" the FBI investigation less than two weeks after employes of the President's reelection committee were caught bugging Democratic headquarters last June 17.

The Senate committee, which begins public hearings next week, told U.S. District Court Friday it has evidence that unnamed White House aides "illegally and improperly removed and destroyed records and documents" pertaining to the Watergate investigation.

Gray's story, apparently taken from his three-hour conversation with committee investigators Thursday, was reported by the Baltimore Sun, the New York Daily News, the New York Times and ABC. On Friday, Gray talked with federal prosecutors.

The reports said Gray told of calling Nixon on the telephone July 6, and telling him about

JUST 'SAT DOWN'

Real Memories—The 1906 Temblor In San Francisco

By PATRICIA PERRY

While emergency helicopters landed at Marin General Hospital in the pretext of an earthquake, 96-year-old Peggy Finnegan sat in Room 232 of the hospital telling it like it really is in a California tremblor.

When the 1906 earthquake hit San Francisco, Mrs. Finnegan said she just "sat down and watched the old chair shake." Then she rushed to the backdoor of her home high on a San Francisco hill and watched fires break out.

Mrs. Finnegan, who now lives at the Nazareth House rest home in San Rafael, was a young mother of eight children when the earthquake struck.

Was she frightened?

"No, me darlin'," chuckled Mrs. Finnegan, who still has a strong Irish brogue, "why should I be? The chimney fell down, that's all."

Did her children scream?

"No, no. We watched the room shaking and went to the back door. Half of 18th Avenue down . . ."

PEGGY FINNEGAN
The real thing

Because their home was on a hill - she can't recall the street - the Finnegans took in the homeless.

"One hundred and fifty people we took in," said Mrs. Finnegan proudly. Her husband, James — "he was the best man ever to breathe the breath of life, me dear" — set up their dining room table in the basement and served coffee to the refugees.

"There was one woman with a new baby," remembered Mrs. Finnegan. "I spoiled that baby. I was good to her. She came in, poor soul, with nothing. She was old and she had a tiny baby . . . they went away after, never saw her again."

But if the Finnegans stayed calm, other San Franciscans didn't. "They were running around panicking like they were half naked," said Mrs. Finnegan scornfully, "while I

Pentagon Papers Case Tossed Out

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The judge in the Pentagon Papers trial, citing government misconduct, yesterday threw out all charges of espionage, conspiracy and theft against Daniel Ellsberg and Athony J. Russo.

The action came two weeks to the day after the startling link with the Watergate affair came to light.

In dismissing the charges and declaring a mistrial, U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne issued a strongly worded statement accusing the government of misconduct so serious it "offended a sense of justice" and "precluded a fair trial."

Byrne said he was dismissing the indictment so that the defendants could not be tried again on the charge because of "an extraordinary series of disclosures regarding the conduct of several government agencies."

The judge cited the revelations during the past two weeks of a White House-ordered burglary of Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office and a wiretap which overheard Ellsberg's telephone conversations and which was not revealed at any time during nearly two years of litigation.

There was pandemonium in the packed courtroom when Byrne made his ruling. Spectators leapt to their feet and gave Byrne a standing, cheering ovation. Ellsberg, 42, gave his weeping wife, Patricia, a kiss and embraced all of his attorneys.

Prosecutor David Nissen strode from the courtroom with a terse "No comment," but Assistant U.S. Attorney Warren Reese, asked by a newsman if the government would appeal the dismissal, replied, "No. This case is dead."

Ellsberg told newsmen on the steps of the courthouse that he planned to file a civil suit charging the government with bad faith prosecution and invasion of privacy. He said he hoped to force the government to reimburse him for the expense of defending himself, estimated at $1 million.

Ellsberg said there was enough evidence "to indict President Nixon for conspiring against Tony and me and the American people."

"These recent events compound the record already pervaded by incidents threatening the defendants' right to a speedy and fair trial," Byrne said.

Nixon Secluded At Retreat For Weekend

THURMONT, Md. (UPI) — President Nixon worked in seclusion at Camp David today, reportedly on a post-Watergate proposal to curb future campaign abuses by both parties.

The White House said officially that the President was "working on his papers" at his mountaintop retreat and that no top aides were with him.

One matter occupying his mind was creation of a bipartisan commission to avoid future Watergates, according to the Washington Evening Star-News.

Close associates of the President, the newspaper said, expect him to announce plans for the commission some time next week.

The proposed commission of 16 to 20 members would include senators and House members of both parties, appointed by congressional leaders, and Presidential appointees.

Acting White House counsel Leonard Garment has been working on the project, which Nixon forecast in his April 30 television speech when he urged political leaders and all Americans to curb "shady tactics" in future elections.

The bipartisan commission would be expected to look into a wide range of campaign reforms in all fields from vote fraud, bribery and other "dirty tricks," to the financing of campaigns and the adequacy of present campaign control laws.

Before he left for Camp David last night, Nixon signed into law a compromise rural electrification bill and asked Congress to approve proposals to provide lawyers for the poor.

The legislation extending the Rural Electrification Loan program was approved on the 38th anniversary of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's order establishing the Rural Electrification Administration (REA).

Roosevelt's New Deal program was intended to provide two per cent loans to bring electricity to farms and other isolated rural areas.

The new program continues the two per cent loans in isolated and economically depressed regions but increases the interest to five per cent in wealthier areas.

The bill, he said, "focuses federal assistance and taxpayer dollars on those who truly need that assistance."

The legislation Nixon submitted to Congress on legal aid for the poor would give the White House the right to appoint members of the Legal Services Corporation's board of directors. A similar plan was rejected by Congress in 1971.

A Congress-approved version, vetoed by Nixon, would have required the President to appoint a majority of the directors from nominations submitted by various groups.

Red Commandos Attack Key Cambodian Position

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Cambodian Communist commandos today attacked government positions at the crossroads town of Tram Khnar, 24 miles south of Phnom Penh, and waves of American fighter-bombers were ordered into the fight.

Field reports said an estimated force of 400-500 Khmer Rouge (rebel) commandos attacked the outposts at the junction of Highways 2 and 3 at Tram Khnar and the battle had begun late Saturday morning. Field officers requested heavy U.S. air support, they said.

Other fighting including U.S. air support for Cambodian troops was reported north, west and south of the capital.

Field reports said government forces were within three miles of recapturing two positions overrun by Communist commandos late Friday, 15 miles west of Phnom Penh. The two outposts, at Wat Phnom and Thmat Pong, were in hilly terrain and evacuated by government troops "after courageously resisting the enemy," Cambodian spokesmen said.

Thailand-based U.S. F111s sent shock waves reverberating throughout the area as they dropped their 500-pound bombs on rebel positions.

Military sources reported that rebel troops also had surrounded Ang Taset, 16 miles north of Phnom Penh.

American jet warplanes flew strikes in the Ang Taset area, along the banks of the Mekong River 20 miles southeast of Phnom Penh where river convoys had come under heavy fire, in the area beside Highway 5 northwest of the capital and on Highway 7 in Kompong Cham province, 60 miles to the north.

U.S. OV10 "Bronco" armed reconnaissance planes also directed air strikes around Takeo, a threatened province capital 55 miles southwest of Phnom Penh on Highway 2, and Kampot, 93 miles southwest of the capital near the Gulf of Thailand.

Other Communist raids were reported along Highway 5 nothwest of the capital, military sources said.

Command spokesmen said Cambodian rebel gunners also shelled government positions about 7-½ miles south of Phnom Penh and at Salalek Pram, 32 miles northwest of the capital during the night.

A forward outpost near the 1,100-year-old ruins at Angkor Wat, 150 miles northwest of Phnom Penh, also came under harassing fire, the command said.

On the Cambodian political front, the ruling High Political Council Friday asked one of its four members, Assembly Speaker In Tam, to select a new Cambodian cabinet. In Tam said a few hours later that if he succeeded in forming the cabinet he expected to become prime minister.

The council's other members are President Lon Nol, Sisowath Sirik Matak and Cheng Heng. All four were instrumental in the March 18, 1970, ouster of former chief of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Connally Withdraws From Law Practice

WASHINGTON (UPI) — John B. Connally, newly appointed White House adviser, has taken a leave of absence from his Texas law firm, avoiding any link to a client under questioning for a $100,000 campaign contribution related to the Watergate scandal.

Connally announced his decision yesterday after it was disclosed that his firm represents Gulf Resources and Chemical Co., whose president, Robert H. Allen, made the contribution.

"I am today taking a leave of absence from my law firm for the period during which I will serve as a special adviser to the President," Connally said in a statement released in Houston. "I am also resigning from all corporate boards on which I serve."

Both Connally and the White House denied there was any conflict of interest involved. But Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said both Connally and President Nixon would take "great care" to avoid any conflict.

Allen appeared yesterday before a federal grand jury in Houston, which is investigating his $100,000 contribution to Nixon's re-election campaign. The money allegedly was routed through Mexico to the Miami bank account of Bernard Barker, a conspirator in the break-in last June 17 at the Watergate offices of the Democratic National Committee.

Newsday, the Long Island newspaper which uncovered Allen's link to the law firm, said the money was transferred from Gulf Resources' bank account to an account of the corporation's Mexican subsidiary, Compania de Azufro Veracruz.

Manuel Ogarrio Daguerra, attorney for the Mexican subsidiary, or his representative then converted $89,000 of the contribution into four checks — which eventually wound up in Barker's account, Newsday said.

The remaining $11,000 was converted into cash and sent back to Texas along with the $89,000 in checks, according to the newspaper.

"The funds were then combined," it said, "with an additional $600,000 in contributions and placed inside a suitcase." It added that Roy Winchester, vice president of Pennzoil United Inc., carried the suitcase to Washington just before April 7—when a new law went into effect requiring disclosure of all campaign contributions."

Judge Halts Firing Of Cotati Official

SANTA ROSA — A Sonoma County Superior Court judge has temporarily halted the firing of the Cotati city manager because of a suit filed by a former city councilman.

Judge Lincoln F. Mahan signed a temporary restraining order against plans by three youthful members of the council to change an ordinance to permit the firing of City Mgr. Paul W. Salfen on a vote of 3-to-2 rather than the current 4-to-1. A hearing in the suit was set for May 21 at 9 a.m.

Alfred Falleti, one of the three incumbents ousted by the Sonoma State College graduates a year ago, charged that the council is overstepping its bounds by changing the vote requirement.

Falleti and other older Cotati residents started a recall action against Mayor Geoffrey Dunham and councilmen Annette Lombardi and Stephen Laughlin after the decision was made to change the ordinance and oust Salfen.

Falleti, through attorney Joseph Henderson, said he was instrumental in adoption of the original ordinance and contended it would do "irreparable harm" if the council could dismiss Salfen with only three votes. Older councilmen Herbert T. Winter and Frank P. Dolinsek have supported Salfen.

He said the present ordinance was intended to provide some semblance of security for the city manager.

"Specifically it was intended to prevent the disruption of the administrative affairs of the city", Falleti said in the suit.

The council had been expected to adopt the ordinance change next Thursday, but will not be able to do so until the injunction is lifted.

Falleti said he would seek to make the restraining order permanent at the May 21 hearing.

Tiburon To Discuss Open Space Plan

The Tiburon City Council, meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday at city hall, will discuss requiring developers to dedicate open space to the city at the time of building.

The council also will discuss the effect that the recent Marin Municipal Water District ban on new water connections will have on downtown development and consider a use permit for a 160-unit development on Vistazo West Street.

New Softball Facilities Under Way

Amid a shortage of softball facilities, the San Rafael Parks and Recreation Commission has been told that city engineers are working on two new diamonds at Albert Park.

The commission was told at Thursday's meeting that many teams wanting to compete in spring leagues were turned away because of the lack of facilities.

Commissioners, thinking part of the overcrowding problem could be due to participation by more city residents than allowed, asked for a report June 14.

In other matters, the commission said it would tour community parks and other facilities at 9 a.m. tomorrow, meeting first at city hall; delayed until completion of the city general plan consideration a park for the Peacock Gap area and recommended that nonresident fees for recreation programs be increased from $2 to $5 by the city council.

Larkspur Ferry Site Given Boost

The Golden Gate Bridge District board, endorsing a unanimous recommendation from its transportation committee, agreed yesterday to proceed with plans for the Larkspur ferry terminal on a site near the mouth of Corte Madera Creek.

The action, which came on a 12-3 vote, rejected pleas made previously by conservationists that planning for terminal design be halted until an alternative site on San Quentin lands is studied.

Director and San Rafael Mayor C. Paul Bettini said he believed that the state Department of Corrections has ruled out use of prison lands for ferry facilities. Director Michael Wornum, however, said he will ask Sen. Peter H. Behr, R-San Rafael, whether or not the San Quentin site is available.

Directors voted to proceed with plans after District engineer Robert E. Shields repeated a warning that the district will lose about $540,000 if planning is halted and the Corte Madera Creek site is ultimately found to be best anyway. Proceeding with engineering plans before an environmental impact report is drafted in October will cost about $250,000, according to Wornum.

David Miller, attorney for the district, noted, however, that the board "may have to back off from the Larkspur site," depending on the findings of the impact report.

The board told staff to proceed with the impact report, and said the report will include an analysis of alternative sites, including San Quentin.

Toll-Free Passage Is Suggested

The president of the Golden Gate Bridge District board proposed yesterday that cars carrying three or more passengers be given toll-free passage over the bridge for a 90-day trial period.

Board president Stephan C. Leonoudakis said he viewed the move as a method of combatting the fuel crisis and traffic congestion.

Colleagues, who appeared to favor the suggestion, suggested that the district study use of propane fuel and revive a study of free ferry passage for commuters.

Leounoudakis said he would refer his proposal — which would permit free car pool passage between the peak commute hours of 7 and 9 a.m., five days a week — to the district transportation committee.

In another move aimed at conserving fuel, Leonoudakis announced the formation of a district "fuel crisis committee", to be charged with studying domestic and foreign sources of fuel for the transit system.

Water Board Is Ordered To Answer Pipe Question

Marin Municipal Water District directors were ordered yesterday to appear before Superior Court Judge Henry J. Broderick May 30 to show cause why they should not approve extending a pipeline to the controversial Madera Del Presidio subdivision in the Meadowsweet area of Corte Madera.

The developers filed a petition in superior court to force the water district to supply the planned project, and declared that if it fails to do so, the district will face a claim for $2 million damages.

In the petition, Cal West Communities Inc.; Harter-Odenthal Investment Co. and Composite Structures Inc. recite a long history of attempts to gain water from the district, beginning with an application last July 17.

The application failed by a 2-2 vote last Sept. 13, the petition declares, because district Director Eugene A. Miller abstained from voting on grounds of possible conflict of interest. His engineering firm was working on some phases of the project.

Directors Jack R. Felson and Ronald T. Stafford voted against the application, as they did when the application was brought up again March 14. Again the application lost by a 2-2 vote, but Miller meanwhile had resigned and his seat was vacant.

Felson and Stafford contended the district lacked water to serve the subdivision, the court action charges, but district directors approved other projects needing even more water between last July and Nov. 21.

Quentin '6' Reappear In Court

The so-called San Quentin Six made their first appearance in a Marin court in nearly a year yesterday, although one of the inmates spent much of the afternoon in a holding cell hammering on the wall.

The other five men accused of murder in the bloody uprising Aug. 21, 1971, at the San Quentin Prison adjustment center sat quietly as Superior Court Judge Henry J. Broderick heard and took under submission a series of motions — mostly aimed at letting defense attorneys remove themselves from the case.

Broderick said he would decide on those questions Monday.

The actual trial of the six convicts came no closer as a result of the day-long court proceeding.

The men have been indicted by the Marin County Grand Jury on charges or murder and conspiracy for the alleged escape attempt in which three prison guards and three convicts, including Soledad Brother George Jackson, died. Also indicted, but vanished since the day of the killings was Jackson's attorney, Stephen M. Bingham, accused of smuggling in a gun used in the breakout attempt.

About 45 spectators sat for the most part quietly through morning and afternoon sessions. Spectators periodically complained of being unable to hear the proceedings through thick glass dividing the audience section from the bench area, and Brokderick several times ordered microphones relocated.

Spain refused to reenter the room in the afternoon session and was placed in an adjoining holding cell. Midway through proceedings, he began lustily kicking the cell walls. The noise reverberated throughout the Hall of Justice like a huge drum.

Spain complained that San Quentin guards had not obeyed a doctor's orders about padding his wrists before shackling him.

Today is Saturday, May 12, the 132nd day of 1973 with 233 to follow.

The moon is approaching its full phase. The morning stars are Mercury, Mars and Jupiter. The evening stars are Venus and Saturn.

Florence Nightingale, the British nurse who founded modern nursing, was born May 12, 1820.

On this day in history:

In 1949, Soviet authorities announced the end of a land blockade of Berlin that had lasted 328 days and whose effects had been neutralized by the famed "Berlin Airlift."

In 1963, President John Kennedy ordered federal troops into Birmingham, Ala., after an outbreak of civil rights rioting.

A thought for the day: Scottish essayist Thomas Carlyle said, "Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man. But for one man who can stand prosperity, there are a hundred who will stand adversity."

ernment conduct has been shielded so long from public view," the judge said.

"The totality of the circumstances of this case offend 'a sense of justice.' The bizarre events have incurably infected the prosecution of this case."

Byrne said it was the conduct of the government "which has placed the case in such a posture that it precludes a fair and dispassionate resolution of these issues by a jury."

The defense expressed elation that the judge based the dismissal on "the totality of government misconduct" rather than the narrower issue of wiretap, which he had appeared to indicate on Thursday would be the basis of a dismissal.

The end came 3 ½ years after Ellsberg, an economist who spent the decade of the 1960s as a government consultant on national security, decided to copy the secret Vietnam War study and turn it over to Congress.

He enlisted the aid of Russo, a colleague at the Rand Corp. in Santa Monica, to make copies at a Los Angeles advertising agency at night.

The documents appeared in The New York Times on June 13, 1971, and although Ellsberg admits leaking them to the news media, the government charged him only with espionage, conspiracy and theft in connection with the copying.

The trial was five months old and was at the point of closing arguments when a series of bombshells burst on April 27.

by 3:15 p.m. By 3:20 p.m., the Novato operation was ended.

Meantime, Kirby's operations center was told Marin General still was waiting for more victims. By 3:30 p.m., an hour and a half after MOHAMED started, the hospital reported eight patients and capacity for about 20 more.

At the 4 p.m. end of the exercise, San Rafael High School reported its victims had been cleared to hospitals. It was never certain when victims of the West Marin accident were finally removed.

"The point of the exercise was to determine where we are weak and where we are strong," Kirby said after it was over. Monday's critique will help provide the answers, he added.

Yesterday's drill was the second of eight disaster exercises planned during the next four years. The first was conducted in December, but was primarily a "paper drill" without actual reenactment throughout the county.

The next, possibly simulating disasters to roads and bridges, is planned for the fall. It will test how city and county public works officials and crews respond to disaster, Kirby said.

White House interference. According to the Sun, Gray said he told the President that he was concerned the FBI and the CIA were being "used" by people close to the White House in the Watergate probe.

The Daily News quoted Gray as saying, "Mr. President, I want to warn you that people around you are wounding you."

The Daily News said he replied: "Well, Pat, you continue pressing the investigation as hard as you can." The Watergate break-in was not mentioned in the conversation, the News said.

Nixon had "no reaction," according to the Sun.

When Ehrlichman and White House Chief of Staff H.R. Haldeman resigned April 30, Nixon said in his televised speech that until last March he had received "continuing assurances" that members of his staff were not involved in political espionage in "any way."

"However," he added, "new information then came to me which persuaded me that there was a real possibility that some of these charges were true and suggesting further there had been an effort to conceal the facts ..."

Gray said the incident with Ehrlichman occurred about 10 or 11 days after the Watergate break-in, according to the reports. Gray tried to set up an appointment with CIA director Richard M. Helms, they said, but it was canceled by Ehrlichman. He reportedly wanted to talk to Helms about CIA involvement in the growing scandal.

Gray resigned amid reports that he had burned White House documents described as "political dynamite."

The Times and Daily News said Gray told the Senate investigators he burned the documents allegedly taken from a safe in Hunt's White House office at his home in Connecticut about six months after they were given to him by former White House counsel John Dean in Ehrlichman's office June 28.

Previously, Gray has said publicly that he had the documents destroyed in his FBI office a few days after he got them.

Hunt has said he forged the documents so they would appear to be State Department cables implicating President Kennedy in the 1963 assassination of South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh Diem.

Dean, who headed the original White House probe into the Watergate affair and was fired by Nixon, has asked U.S. District Court to assume responsibility for other White House documents he has hidden in a safe deposit box in Virginia.

The Senate committee asked the court for access to that safe deposit box. Judge John J. Sirica has scheduled a hearing Monday on the matter.

The committee said it believes the documents relate to "illegal, improper or unethical activity" during the 1972 presidential campaign.

The refugees stayed in the Finnegan's house for several days. It was a noisy time, said Mrs. Finnegan. Today, she can't remember too many details of the disaster and says she tires easily. She was in Marin General for a throat operation at the time of yesterday's interview.

But she does recall refugees sleeping on the floor of their home with blankets and water being brought in. The gas pipes supplying her house didn't rupture and there were no fires nearby.

She remembers, however, with vivid clarity — and swears she'll never forget — a doctor and his wife who were given the Finnegan's best bedroom to stay in.

"Our best room," she grumbled, "a lovely clean room all to themselves. Three months they stayed and off they went. I never got five cents, though they promised to pay. I've seen her since, oh, yes, but never a mention of paying . . . the scallywags."

What advice would she give to present-day Californians enduring an equally devastating earthquake?

"Stay still. Don't run here and run there. Stay inside your house. Fire won't bother you. Keep easy."

DANCE REVIEW

Little Enthusiasm By Students

By SHIRLEY LIPTON

The audience that half filled Warren Auditorium Thursday night was not particularly enthusiastic about the Sonoma State College Dance Workshop concert they saw, but then, with few exceptions, the dancers didn't show much enthusiasm either.

Apparently, most of the students, who did their own choreography, felt they must be very serious and terribly significant. They seemed to forget there is an audience out there expecting to be entertained.

In the program of 10 dances, there was only one humorous piece and it received considerable applause and even a few scattered "bravos." This selection was called "Sally and Me" and featured Kenn Stewart in a combination ventriloquist routine and dance with a blonde female dummy.

He did several types of dances including a fox trot, Charleston and a very funny tango. In the latter, the dummy's arms snaked around his shoulders and she kissed him passionately on the neck. For a brief moment everyone believed she was real.

There were three dancers: one male in a clingy white jumpsuit, two women dressed in white leotards with black sequined jackets and crocheted helmets. They began with slow, very stylized movements which eventually drifted into a fast and loose dance to a wild rock beat.

For most of the dance selections, the stage was bare. But in the dance called "Secret," long strips of rice paper were hung from the top of the stage. A voice off-stage read this haiku:

"The first dream of the new year,
I smiled and kept it a secret to myself."

The first dancer entered dressed in a Japanese short kimono, she took a large brush and began writing on the paper. A second dancer, dressed in black leotards appeared from behind the paper and started dancing. She imitated all the movements of the brush with her body. Finally, both artist and her secret self danced together.

A more familiar kind of music appeared in "The Little Fugue" by Bach. This was a deceptively simple dance done in exact time to the mathematical precision of Bach, contrapuntal.

The rest of the program can be dismissed fairly easily. By trying to be symbolic, the dancers merely confused the audience. "In search of a Center," for instance, didn't seem to have a center worth searching for. Two girls displayed a few acrobatic kicks and the ability to lean backwards gracefully, but not much else.

By far the worst selection, however, was a dance called "SAE 30-Weight Non-Detergent." No music played as three large oil drums rolled out on stage. Five girls in black leotards mounted the barrels and moved them around. Occasionally, they tapped a foot or rolled over backwards, but very little dancing was done.

Costuming for the workshop was kept at a minimum. Most of the dancers simply wore leotards and tights in various colors. Stage decorations consisted of the rice paper used in the Japanese piece and three light fixtures used in the finale, but none of this would have mattered if the dance program itself was exciting.

I would ask the workshop directors to remember that when they charge admission and invite the public, their first obligation is to provide entertainment. Students of modern dance should learn the difference between lack of plot or story and lack of purpose. They may think the dance is meaningful and deep, but too often the audience is left confused and bored.

Check Charge Hearing Set

Ronald Alfred Wold, 40, of no fixed address, will have a preliminary hearing May 22 on a charge of issuing 10 fictitious checks in San Rafael stores in January.

He pleaded innocent to the charge yesterday before Marin Municipal Court Judge Gary W. Thomas.

Wold was arrested in Inyo County on a fugitive warrant charging the bad checks and parole violation, and was returned to Marin County Jail Wednesday by San Rafael police..

College's Nursing Program Faces Enrollment Cutback

Unless the College of Marin nursing program receives two new instructors, new student enrollment may have to be slashed and an "unrealistic" and "dangerous" instructor-student ratio will continue.

That's the substance of a complaint lodged to college officials by students and teachers in the program, long recognized as one of the state's best.

The program now admits 55 new students each year, but that may drop to 40 in the fall unless two new instructors are added, according to department officials. The reason is that the instructor-student ratio of 1-15 is too high, they say.

A petition signed by 83 nursing students is to be presented Wednesday to the Marin Community College District board expressing concern over the ratio as "unrealistic, dangerous to patients' safety" and harmful to classroom learning.

Lyla Cromer, head of the nursing department, said the state board of Nurse Examiners and Nurse Registration recommends a ratio of one instructor to every 10 students. The College of Marin has six instructors, with Mrs. Cromer teaching part of the time. There are nearly 100 students.

The present ratio is potentially dangerous, said Mrs. Cromer, because students spend much of their time in clinical situations, working at Marin General and Ross General hospitals, and in doctors' offices, psychiatric clinics and public health facilities.

"We get situations where all fifteen students are in different units in a hospital with only one instructor to supervise them. . . there might be two in an intensive care unit, one in a coronary care unit, others in pediatrics, and the emergency room. . . it means the instructor has to run fast, to say the least."

Prospects of hiring two more instructors and thus insuring enrollment of 55 new students in the fall are unclear at the moment. John A. Grasham, district superintendent, said the department's request is being considered "under the budgetary process" and he hasn't decided yet whether he'll recommend the extra positions.

"We make our five-year budget projections on certain assumptions," Grasham said. "And one of these assumptions is that there will be no more faculty hired for College of Marin."

He said the nursing program is a very expensive department to run, with higher per student costs than other departments.

Kansas Girl Is Junior Miss Winner

Miss Rutledge, 18, daughter of a Marine Corps pilot, was selected for the title Friday over high school seniors from the other 49 states.

"I can't believe it," Miss Rutledge said. "It's such a wonderful thing. I'm looking forward to promoting the pageant because I think it's the greatest thing a girl can get into."

Susan Alison Murphy, 17, of Kailua, Hawaii, was named first runnerup. Karen Heidcamp, 17, of Park Ridge, Ill., was chosen second runnerup.

Laura Johnson, 17, of Sturgis, S. D., was third runnerup and Rebecca Jones, 18, of Boise, Idaho, was fourth runnerup.

Miss Rutledge won a $10,000 college scholarship which she said she will use to attend Pennsylvania State University. She said she hopes to work with computers for the National Space and Aeronautics Administration.

The 5-foot-2 winner, who has blonde hair and green eyes, is the daughter of Marine Lt. Col. Gary L. Rutledge, a veteran of the Indochina War.

Construction Of Pond Approved

The Las Gallinas Valley Sanitary District board last night approved construction of a pond at its sewage treatment plant on Smith Ranch Road that would increase the plant's flow capacity 60,000 gallons a day.

If approved by the Regional Water Quality Control board, construction would begin on the $35,000 project in August and be completed in September, according to Edward Tibbetts, district engineer.

The board also agreed to spend $1,000 for a consulting attorney's opinion on the district's legal responsibilities to provide new sewer hookups, Tibbetts said.

Jury Finds Pair Guilty In Theft

A Marin Superior Court jury convicted two Marin City men of concealing stolen property yesterday after a two-week trial arising from the Jan. 9 theft of a safe containing thousands of dollars from a Mill Valley home.

Judge Henry J. Broderick set sentencing for May 21 for Kenny Ray White, 21, and Claude Burton, 28. White also had been charged with burglary, but the jury cleared him on the charge.

A third man in the case is scheduled for sentencing tomorrow, because he pleaded guilty to a reduced misdemeanor count of concealing stolen property. Judge Broderick accepted the plea from Billy Maurice Thomas, 38, also of Marin City, and promised him no more than 60 days in jail as a result of plea bargaining.

During the long trial of White and Burton, Leonard Lew of 32 Underhill Road, Mill Valley, testified that the safe stolen from his home contained $9,000 in large bills and costly jewelry. Stereo equipment also was stolen from the home.

Sheriff's deputies discovered that the safe was being cut open with an aceylene torch in an apartment at 223 Drake Avenue, Marin City, but the thieves fled and were arrested later when two men began trying to cash $1,000 bills in a nearby restaurant.

HOW TO PLAY WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

The Extra 50 Points Are Not Significant — Don't Take Risk

When you're not doubled and particularly when you're not vulnerable, there's not much difference between a one-trick and a two-trick defeat. You can afford to risk going down one additional trick if your line of play will improve your chance to make the contract.

Opening lead — ♣ Q

SEES DANGER

West opened the queen of clubs and South had no trouble in seeing the danger: He might easily lose a trick in each suit.

All would be well if East had the king of hearts. The normal finesse would work whenever South tried it. South was on the point of trying a finesse with the queen of hearts when he saw an extra chance.

Declarer simply led a low heart from dummy and finessed with the nine from his own hand. The important thing about this play was that it might work but couldn't lose anything material even if it failed.

WEST TAKES TRICK

As it happened, West had to win the trick with the king of hearts. He returned another club, forcing out the remaining top card in that suit. South thereupon took the ace and queen of hearts, discarding the losing club from dummy.

Only then could South afford to lead a trump. The game contract was then safe.

If South had led trumps earlier, West would have developed a club trick. Then South would surely lose one trick in each suit.

HEART FINESSE

Now let's look at the deep finesse in hearts. If this finesse loses to the ten or jack, declarer will get back to dummy with a club in time to finesse with the queen of hearts. If the second finesse wins, South will discard dummy's club loser on the ace of hearts.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner deals and bids one diamond and the next player doubles.

You hold:
♠- J 7 4 3 2
♦- Q 8 4
♣- A K 5.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Redouble, planning to bid spades at your next opportunity.

If partner cannot raise spades, you will show your diamond support. The redouble promises about 10 points in high cards or strong support for partner.

Ansel Adams Show At Dominican College

Photographs by Ansel Adams are being exhibited from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on weekdays through July 1 in the library at Dominican College of San Rafael.

Eight Dominican campus scenes are included among the photographs made between the years 1938 through 1955. The exhibit represents a small part of the collection presented to Dominican College by Ansel Adams, who was closely associated with the college during his early years in photography.

BIRTHDAY QUIZ

By GORDON B. GREB

True or False? Let's set the record straight on today's birthday greats.

1. HOWARD K. SMITH is 59 today. A graduate of Tulane University, he attended Oxford on a scholarship, then became a news correspondent in Europe up to World War II, leaving Germany on the last train. Is it true he left CBS in 1961, joining the ABC network, because of a program he did that allowed Alger Hiss to criticize and evaluate the work of Richard M. Nixon?

2. YOGI BERRA is 48 today. Made fun of when he was young, he surprised everybody after leaving his hometown of St. Louis, Mo., becoming the greatest catcher in the history of the New York "Yankees." Would you believe he holds more World Series records than any player in history — most Series played, most games, most hits, most singles, most doubles, most total bases, and most runs batted in?

3. MILDRED H. McALFEE, 73 today, was named the first director of the WAVES by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in World War II. Before the war was over, she commanded 78,000 enlisted women and more than 8,000 female officers. Is it true this outfit was called "Women Accepted for Voluntary Emergency Service"?

4. FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE shocked her parents and London society by choosing to become a nurse at age 19, and occupation considered unworthy of fine women. Yet she single-handedly brought status to this profession by her service in war. Is it true she was killed at age 27 in the Crimean conflict?

ANSWERS: 1 - True; 2 - Ture; 3 - True; 4 - False.

ART REVIEW

Magical Patterns Displayed

By ADA GARFINKEL

Luis Cervantes's eye-dazzling and mind-boggling paintings can do anything he wants them to do.

In a three-artist exhibit of San Francisco's LaRaza painters at the College of Marin's Student Center, Cervantes's geometric and visionary paintings form and reform themselves — now advancing, now receding and bending and reshaping their format.

Cervantes is fully aware of all the illusionary variables inherent in the op-art technique and in the optical effects of fluorescent colors, and uses them both.

In one large painting entitled "What the Deep Eye Sees," for example, small diamond shapes diminish in size and become diffused in color as they move toward the four peripheral edges, creating an illusion of a bulging, three-dimensional, sculptural form.

And on a similarly shaped format, fluorescent pink, turquoise, and canary yellow combinations bounce and scintillate in "A Gift to the Darkness."

However, it is in the rainbow-colored visionary painting entitled "Where the Last Buffalo Roam" that Cervantes reaches tour-de-force stature.

Carlos Lorca, a native of Guatemala, is the most traditional of the three artists in the LaRaza Spring Cultural Festival show.

Lorca's stylized figures and strong primary colors — red, yellow, and blue, and acid greens — are weighty and timeless.

The third in the trio is Peter Rodriguez whose freely brushed, linear paintings are as fresh as spring rain.

Their spontaneity and linear energy derive from the action painting of abstract expressionism, while the lozenge shapes and overlapping circles in "Place Where Gods Go to Sing" recall the works of Kandinsky.

In these works, much of the canvas remains pristine white, while the sensitivity of his brush creates quick, caligraphic notes in both graded black and ochre washes and full-bodied applications, which transform into magic flower gardens with unobtrusive pop imagery.

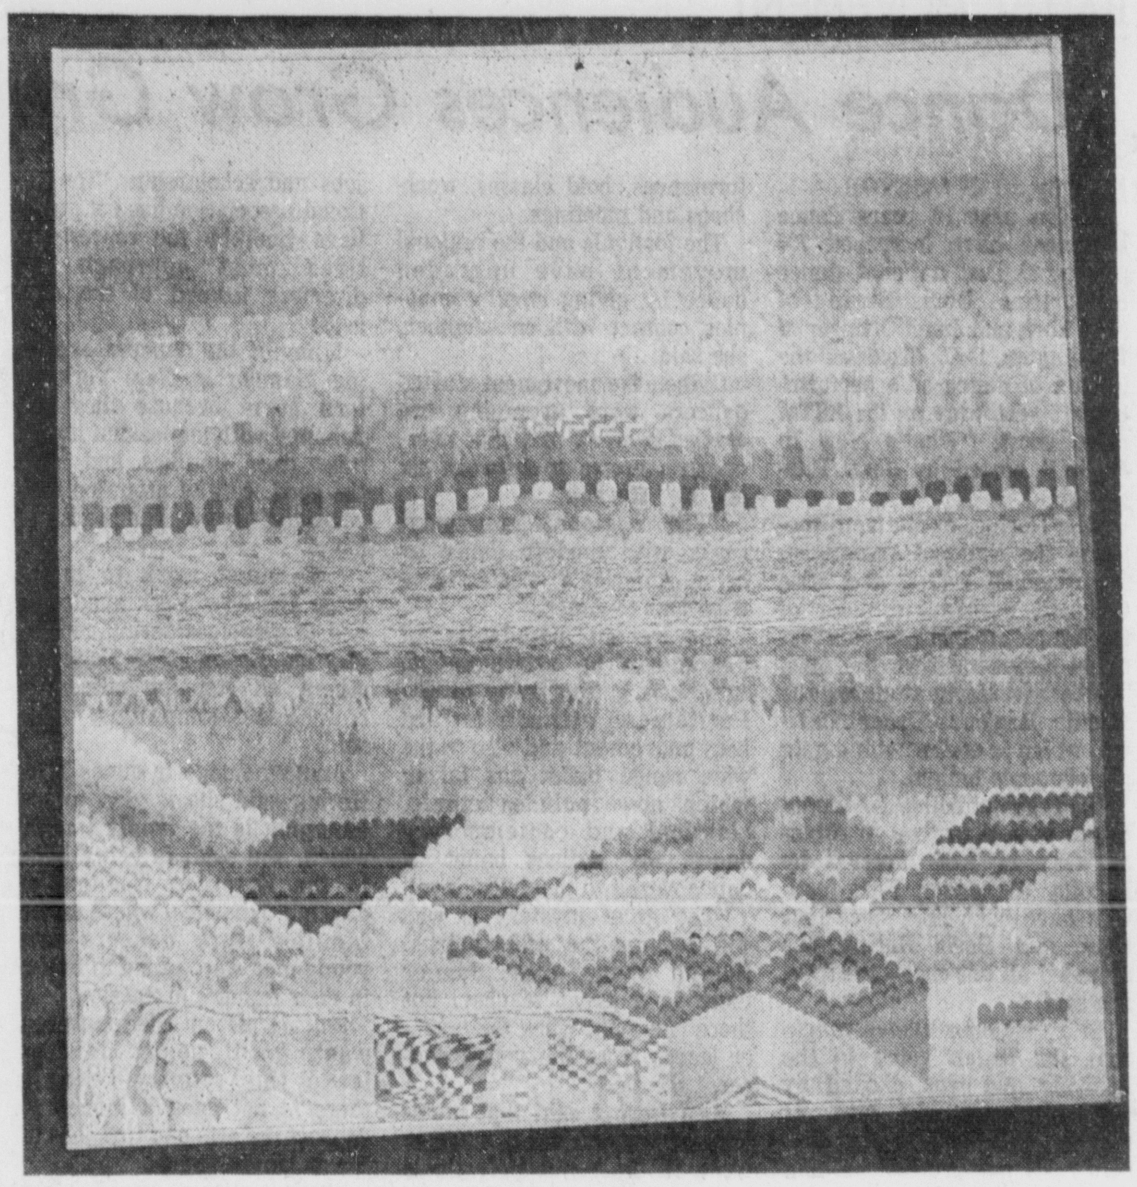
This exhibit which has been arranged by Chicano students at College of Marin, will continue through May 18, and may be seen weekdays from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Theme Sought For Festival

The Mill Valley Fall Arts Festival, a Southern Marin tradition for 17 years, is seeking a poster and theme for its 18th show set for Sept. 29 and 30 at Boyle Park in Mill Valley.

Festival president Tora D. Garaventa, said persons interested in entering a poster in the contest should bring a sample to the festival committee's next meeting at 8 p.m. June 6 at Mill Valley City Hall.

Festival members, meeting Thursday, also named members to seven committees to plan the annual event, Mrs. Garaventa said.



LARAZA PAINTINGS — Rainbow-colored rows of grazing land and op-art feed stalls are seen in Luis Cervantes's visionary painting entitled, "Where the Last Buffalo Roam." It is included in the LaRaza Spring Cultural Festival Exhibit in the College of Marin's Student Center.

By KAY KSANDA

They always have a lot of fun up in Novato when their Community Players persent their annual musical show. This year it was no exception. The chorus again walked off with the outstanding performance.

"Kiss Me Kate," the Cole Porter musical version of Shakespeare's "Taming of The Shrew," opened last weekend to a cheering crowd, and will have its final performance tonight at 8:30 o'clock at the Novato Community House.

The show last night got off to a slow and jerky start with a milling scene onstage that went on too long, and really didn't kick up to that grand old tune, "Another Opening, Another Show."

The whole first act was weak, lines were thrown everywhere except to the audience, and it was hit and miss with the act's meaning. The problem was immediately evident: the two major characters had voice difficulties.

Although Jack Mitchell as Petruchio had a sweet baritone, much of his crutial dialogue was lost, particularly the punch lines which dropped out of range to all but the first few rows. They were indistinct. He moved easily through the character as if Pertuchio were a diletante instead of one of the stage's most lusty male figures.

Lei Mann as Kate had a clear speaking voice, fine presence, and good projection, but poor breathing for her music. As a romantic couple they worked well together, but for the story line, I couldn't believe she would pick him over her millionaire boy friend. Bob Marchant's resemblence to Henry Kissinger (as the boy friend) sparked and updated the show.

Sally McGillis has probably one of the best voices and delivery around for the part of Bianca, and she performed with ease, even with the handicap of a "dog collar" brace around her neck — made necessary by a recent whiplash injury. With a little lace the costumer had changed this into a 16th Century Ruff.

Adding to her song and dance was Dick Buell as Bill Calhoun, or Lucentio. He had flair, timing, good voice, and personality. Together, both he and Miss McGillis didn't seem to have enough material to show what they could really do.

It was the opening of the second act that finally jelled the show and made the pace. It was done by the combined sock power of the chorus and dancers weaving in and out in beautiful costumes and full voice in an intricate, exhilarating folk dance. It was a show stopper.

My acting award goes to a minor part, a gangster, played by Alex Consagra. Although he had little to say in his first scene, he was frugal in his gestures, clear in his speech, and in to his character every moment. When he was onstage I couldn't take my eyes off of him.

Both the set and the costuming were excellent for a local performance. Choreography and music by David Block was superior. The accompaniment was a pianist, 16-year-old Patrick Terry, and drummer Bob Anderson.

Free Spring Concert Set Next Week

The College of Marin's collegiate chorale, community orchestra and college chorus will present a free spring concert on May 19 at 8:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Theater.

The orchestra and chorale will perform Leonard Bernstein's "Chichester Psalms." Using strings, brass, harp and percussion, the performance will be conducted by John H. Myers, director of the community orchestra. Soloists will be soprano Terry Buckley, alto Janet Rue, tenor Nicholas Reid, bass Horace Hill and John Eastman, boy alto.

The collegiate chorale, directed by Scott Merrick, will sing "A German Requiem" by Heinrich Schutz, and, directed by William Amatneek, Randall Thompson's "Allelulia."

Dr. Stanley Craczek will conduct the college chorus in several short works, including one using a tape of synthesized music.

The two choruses will combine for "Gloria in Excelsis" by Mozart and Handel's "Allelujah, Amen." Soloists in the latter work will be Elaine Messer, Janet Rue, Nicholas Reid and Louis Weiner.

Ibsen — Big Winner At Film Event

CANNES, France (UPI) — Joseph Losey's "A Doll's House", adapted from the Henrik Ibsen play of the same name was the favorite of patrons of the 26th annual Cannes Film Festival yesterday — the first full day of screenings.

The festival was featuring films by Italian director Mario Monicelli and American James Willam Geurcio today.

The Guercio film was to be "Electra Glide in Blue" and the Monicelli film is "Nous Voulons des Colonels" ("We want the Colonels.").

"In spite of the difficult dialogue of Ibsen and the movie being rather long, it is a very, very good film," one person said of "A Doll's House."

Persons who watched all the films presented yesterday missed a gray and rain soaked day in this French Riviera city. They entered the theater in the morning and emerged again for dinner as clouds faded and a clear night broke.

By PATRICIA PERRY

It's been only 16 years since Brendan Behan wrote "The Hostage," yet already it has become a period piece, offering a collection of comic Irish patriots in a "despicable rooming house" in Dublin, chatting and singing about the bloody British and remembering the Easter Rebellion and DeValera.

It's a period piece, indeed, that has no relevance to today's desperate street warfare in Belfast, with a generation of children who know nothing but bombs and murder and hate.

And, as presented last night by the College of Marin Department of Theater Arts, it's a period that's well worth revisiting.

This production has all the pace, all the vigor, all the sheer professionalism that's a hallmark of the group's productions. Theater III, the old Festival Theater, is a smashing setting for the music-hall style play, and it's easy to understand why the players love the old rustic theater.

Dakin Matthews, the company's only professional, earns every penny as Pat, the one-time Irish Republican Army zealot who belatedly realized the futility of blind patriotism. His carefully controlled cynicism, heightened as he became drunker and drunker, was clever and artful.

His cynicism was matched by Barbara Jeppesen, his maybe wife. She remained skeptical and irascible — a feat of timing since all about her were going balmy.

In a cast of nutty characters, each of whom delighted a capacity first-night audience, it's possible to single out only a few.

John McDillis was first class as Monsewer, the mad expatriate Englishman who is an unofficial IRA general. Each time he emerges from the bathroom, upper lip stiff, bagpipes at the ready, it's as if every eccentric Briton who ever lived is marching the stage, toes turned up.

Kendell Jackson as Teresa, innocent yet knowing, was a perfect foil for the imprisoned British Army private, played by Jeffrey Josephson. His cockney accent — to a demanding British ear — was bloody good, a fine performance by a newcomer to the department.

William C. Walsh as Princess Grace was just as gay as gay could be, backed up by a shimmering David Silverman as Rio Rita — an improbable pair who became even gayer when a splendidly seedy Robin Williams, as Mr. Mulleady, joined them in one of the best songs in the show.

All the singing, in fact, is done with great gusto, aided by a quartet of implacable tarts who are the musicians. The four girls, Karen MacDonald, Cathy Hudnall, Cricket Waldeck, and Robin Willat, don't say much, if anything, but they play superbly.

The show is highly recommended. There's only one reservation. It seemed a great pity that the producers saw fit to bring the play "up to date" by inserting references to Henry Kissinger and Raquel Welch and Leonid Breshnev since it is a play about the Irish in the 1950's.

It isn't about the Ireland of 1973. That's an entirely different — and not half so funny — kettle of fish. Each false reference jars the audience.

"The Hostage" will be presented again tonight and on May 17, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 26 and 27 at 8 p.m. in Theater III on the grounds of the San Francisco Theological Seminary in San Anselmo.

New Sudanese Cabinet Seated

CAIRO (UPI) — The new Sudanese cabinet was sworn in today by President Jaafar Numeiry, the Middle East News Agency said.

In a dispatch from Khartoum, the agency said a number of new governors were also sworn in by the Sudanese leader.

The new cabinet headed by Numeiry was announced in Khartoum Thursday, the agency said.

Plea Made To Theft From Safe

Gary Richard Westover, 19, of Sacramento, pleaded innocent yesterday to a charge of stealing $2,259 from the safe of a Strawberry area drive-in restaurant where he was assistant manager.

Municipal Court Judge Gary W. Thomas ordered a preliminary hearing on the charge on Tuesday, when preliminary hearings for two others arrested in the case, James H. Krainik, 20, and Michael John Connolly, 20, both of San Rafael, also will be held.

Westover was on duty at the MacDonald's restaurant just before the late night theft Feb. 6, and Krainick had quit as a maintenance man for the restaurant just before the burglary, sheriff's deputies reported.

Krainik and Connolly previously pleaded innocent.

BALLET MOVEMENT

Dance Audiences Grow Greatly

By JOAN LISETOR

In the past 10 years dance audiences have increased 700 per cent. Two national dance authorities, Doris Hering of New York and Janet Ottinger of Washington, D.C., discussed the impact of dance as a performing art yesterday on the KTIM radio show, "What's New In Marin," hosted by Jean Fitzgerald.

Miss Hering, executive director of the National Association for Regional Ballet, and Miss Ottinger, assistant director of the dance program for the National Endowment for the Arts, are both in Marin attending the Pacific Regional Dance Festival, which is ending with a gala performance tonight.

The regional ballet movement began with a festival in Atlanta, Ga., in 1956 directed by Dorothy Alexander. Fifty festivals have been held since that time, and Doris Hering has attended all but one — the first, she said.

As a critic for Dance magazine she began going to the festivals and was excited by what she saw, she said. At regional festivals young dancers from non professional and semi professional companies within the regional give performances, hold classes, workshops and meetings.

The festivals and the regional movement have upgraded dance by giving small companies contact with one another, she said.

"When the movement started dancers were averaging two classes a week and that average has grown to between six and 12," she said.

The recent popularity of dance can be attributed to America's getting away from a Puritanical attitude toward body movement and also to the wide range ballet has taken, which now includes ethnic, classical and contemporary dance. She defines ballet as dance raised to theatrical level.

"The great mystery is who will become the great artists. Behind every great dancer there is a great teacher, but there is a point when the teacher learns from the young dancer," she said.

Miss Hering said that members of professional companies come to the regional festivals and snap up the good dancers, especially males with offers of jobs and scholarships. The national association has set guidelines whereby the representatives must approach the directors instead of the dancers.

Many of the dancers expecting glamour in New York return home because they are unhappy with unpleasant living, miss their families and miss the good, careful attention they received from teachers at home.

"We must work to break down the New York syndrome and to stop considering companies like Boston, New York and others as stepping stones to New York companies," she said.

Another image in dance Miss Hering said she is glad to see emerging is the family image, which, she said, is going back to the European tradition of dancing dynasties, where entire families were dancers and young men were proud to follow in their father's profession.

She is often disappointed when good, young dancers leave this country because there is not enough money to support the arts and find jobs in Europe and Canada.

"It is sad that we have not yet reached the age of sophistication to support artists in any of the arts," Miss Hering said.

The National Endowment for the Arts is the first government agency created to fund the arts and was created by an act of Congress in 1965.

"It is still substantially less than European funding and is just beginning to make a dent in the needs," Janet Ottinger explained. "We are a funding agency without control, although we only fund special projects and have special guidelines. Our major area of support (in the dance division) is touring, which is extremely important to professional companies because there is not sufficient audience to stay one place."

With a budget of $38.2 million it is difficult for the agency to achieve its goal of making the arts available to all, and the agency is constantly faced with a decrease in funding because Congress feels social issues should have precedence over the arts, not realizing social issues are so closely associated with the arts, she said.

Miss Ottinger is attending the regional festival as a part of her job, "seeing what's happening in the country to be responsive to the needs."

Mrs. Waldheim's Home: Other UN

By RICKY ROSENTHAL
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The United Nations has two homes on the East River in New York City.

One is the glass and concrete complex where meetings are held. The other is the official residence of Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim at 3 Sutton Place.

Since December, 1972, Mrs. Waldheim has been furnishing the five floors of the Georgian-style residence. The house also has a luxury unknown to most New Yorkers — a sweeping, grass-blanketed backyard — which is shared with such neighbors as the Paul Hoffmans. (He once headed the United Nations Development Program.)

The Secretary-General's house was donated by the president of Steuben Glass, Arthur Houghton. His gift was made to the United Nations through the United Nations Association (NA), a United States citizen's organization that disseminates information about the U.N. and its work.

This first official residence in the United Nations' history was built by J. P. Morgan for his daughter Anne. The house is bisected by a spiral staircase that leads to informal private living quarters.

THE HOUSE has some 13 rooms — including a commodious kitchen and dining room facing the East River on the first floor. Eighteen guests can be seated for conversation, and the room seems to hum with meals enjoyed there.

Mrs. Waldheim says she has done "a lot of poking around in antique shops" and netted some remarkable pieces. An Austrian tabernacle and a commode in baroque style are situated in a 38-foot drawing room which is covered by an enormous pastel needlepoint carpet, the gift of New York City Commission to the U.N., John Loeb.

When finished the room "will not be stiff, but cozy," said Mrs. Waldheim.

During a recent visit to China, she collected a vase and several lacquered chests. "You cannot buy old things in China, they cannot be exported," said Mrs. Waldheim. "But they did take me to two antique shops."

Her decorating philosophy is: "Certain things from the Louis's (15th and 16th) and a Chinese piece in between." She wants no UN blue nor Austrian red-and-white flag.

A painting by Cecilia Beaux, an American portraitist of the 1920s, graces a staircase. "It is the most talked-about painting," said Mrs. Waldheim, indicating the many lent by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. "People often ask, "Is this you when you were young?' "

ART IS one interest of Mrs. Waldheim, and her bookcases in the dark-stained, antique-paneled English library are filled with texts — from Durer to "20,000 Years of Fashion."

The rose-burgundy library has several English game chests (1875), a Chinese Chippendale table, a massive Dutch writing desk, and two Persian carpets. The carpets were the gift of Prime Minister Amir-Abbas Hoveida of Iran. All this is watched over by "Miss Sparrow," a painting by Thomas Gainsborough. Companion paintings in this room are pastoral — Courbet's "A Brook in the Forest" and two Corots.

The Pink Salon is a furnishing confection. Claude Monet's "The Seine at Vetheuil" and two rare Angelica Kauffmans, "Venus" and "Eros," hang there. A recent gift of a solid gold box from the Prime Minister of Thailand adorns a coffee table. Brass sconces of indeterminate weight — "It takes two men to put them up" — and andirons are on loan. There also is a Renoir, "The Artist's House at Cagnes," several Japanese prints, and a Chagall print, with Spode and Limoge China sprinkled about the room like tasteful porcelain raindrops.

Having just returned from Panama and Bogota, traveling is much on Mrs. Waldheim's mind. One solution to the problem of what to do with extra change at the close of a trip is an envelope invented by Irene Scheffcy of Union Station, Pa., for UNICEF. The material for the envelope was developed by Dupont; it won't tear or become water-damaged.

"WHEN YOU are leaving your flight, put your change in an envelope, and it will go postpaid to the UN children's fund," said Mrs. Waldheim.

She recalled the subway in China made of "marvelous shades of marble," and remembered how it "rained sideways at the Great Wall — I never saw such a rain beat down on us like that."

She recounted how much rehabilitation work with children now is being done where there used to be no interest. In Thailand, for example, "They are very proud of their school for the retarded."

Mrs. Waldheim said she has found "very idealistic people" working all over the world. She is still puzzled, she added, by the fact that many Americans who should know better "still think the United Nations is a world government."

Shelled Pecans Mostly Native

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (UPI) — Imported pecans yield more meat than native types, but most of the shelled pecan meats available in grocery stores come from native varieties.

Judy Ann Grubbs, foods and nutrition specialist for Texas A&M University's agricultural extension service, says it generally takes 2.5 pounds of native pecans in the shell to get one pound of meats. Two pounds of the imported varieties will yield at least one pound of shelled meats, she says.

The Egg Sizes

NEW YORK (UPI) — Egg size is based on weight per dozen. According to a standard set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, extra large eggs must weigh at least 27 ounces per dozen; large, 24 ounces; medium 21 ounces and small, 18 ounces.

DEAR RAP:

I want to tell you about my best friend.

She's almost twice my age. She's mature, yet she is the first to say you're never too old to learn something new. I know she isn't perfect, and she would be the first to admit it. But I wouldn't want her any other way.

I've told her things I wouldn't even write in my diary. I know my innermost thoughts are safe with her. I hope she knows the same of me.

When I am troubled, I can always turn to her. She will never refuse me a shoulder to cry on.

I would never hurt her intentionally, and I know from past experiences she would protect me as best she can.

I love her dearly, and I'm sure she knows. But all the same, please print this and satisfy my foolish whim by saying to her and whoever else may read:

Mom: I'm proud to be your daughter! — CARRIE OF FRESNO

DEAR CARRIE:

We saved your letter until Mother's Day because it's about the nicest gift a girl can give to her mother.

Let's hope quite a lot of "Moms" read it along with their special breakfast-in-bed on May 13th. — HELEN AND SUE

HELEN AND SUE:

I'm a white, middle-class male and I, too, feel discriminated against. Not only minorities (black, red, brown) get first consideration at colleges or for jobs, but we must also contend with women now. Those "quotas" must be filled — then, if there is any money left, we white guys get a whack at things.

In the past three weeks I've missed out on two jobs because I wasn't female. They're even infiltrating the police department, insisting they be put on regular beats.

What's a guy to do, outside of becoming a transvestite? — DONE OUT AND IN (and needing money for college)

DOAI:

We hear Ma Bell is looking for "sons." In some areas the telephone company has pulled a switch: it's actively recruiting male operators.

DEAR RAP:

I'm in favor of lowering discrimination, but I think our society is going too far. Believe me, I'm not prejudiced —just desperate.

I recently found out that one of my friends, a member of a minority group, received $1600 to attend a junior college. He has a 2.0 grade point average from high school. This is just one of many cases.

I am an 18-year-old freshman in a university near my home. I was a lifetime member of the California State Scholarship Federation and was quite active in high school.

Yet I applied for many scholarships last fall, receiving only one for $250 which lasted only one semester. This was given to me by an organization of which I am a member.

Thanks for printing the middle-class male's side of it, Helen and Sue. We need help too. — CONCERNED STUDENT

How To Avoid Chafing At Armholes

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I play a great deal of tennis and enjoy making my own dresses. I find I can really save money. My problem is that the dresses I make always rub my skin raw at the armholes. Why aren't patterns cut the same as the ready-made dresses?

MARY M.

DEAR MAY,

Since I'm not a tennis player, I found some avid fans who were willing to share their experiences with the most successful type of dresses to wear for comfort as well as easy care.

The problem you are referring to involves the shaping of the armhole. There is one dress that is especially successful in every way. It has been designed by Vogue Pattern Company, number 8549. It is cut with square armholes to relieve the strain of an armhole cut too high since your arms are moving forward more than when wearing an ordinary dress.

If you do not find this pattern, you may make your adjustments on any pattern. The width of the shoulder is also important, especially when an ordinary armhole is used. It is often cut too wide.

When stitching your facing to the armholes, curve your stitching line in toward the garment, from shoulder to underarm. In other words, your seam will be slightly wider and can be trimmed back later. This is a much simpler operation than trying to cut your pattern different and then trying to cut your facing to fit.

If you would like a square armhole and your pattern doesn't call for one, simply take your ruler and draw a straight line extending from the seamline of the armhole, meeting a straight line extending from the underarm seam. You can stitch deeper if you desire, but try it first until you are sure of yourself.

Tennis dresses should fit fairly loose. The neckline is up to the individual. Some prefer a "V" neckline, others a jewel neckline and still others prefer a small flat collar. You can add a variety of trims today (even touches of color). There are still a few private clubs that do not allow color, check first.

As to fabrics for your best comfort, if it is extremely hot, and you are playing on outdoor courts, your choice should definitely be cotton. Cottons today are all treated for easy care, they can be washed in the machine and dried in the dryer. Cotton breathes, absorbs the moisture and is cool to wear. I personally feel that cotton is more attractive than knits.

If heat is no problem, you can choose one of the many varieties of polyester knits. The fun part of making your own is the wide variety of trims and individual touches you can add to make your own individual look.

Be sure to remember to preshrink all fabrics and trims, including zippers, before you sit down to begin sewing. This will insure perfect results after your garment has been laundered.

The pattern suggested today is only one of the many avilable in all the major pattern books. Try them. I don't imagine you'll ever be willing to spend the money on ready-made ones again. Besides, they are so simple to make, the beginner with sewing can come up with a successful dress on her first attempt.

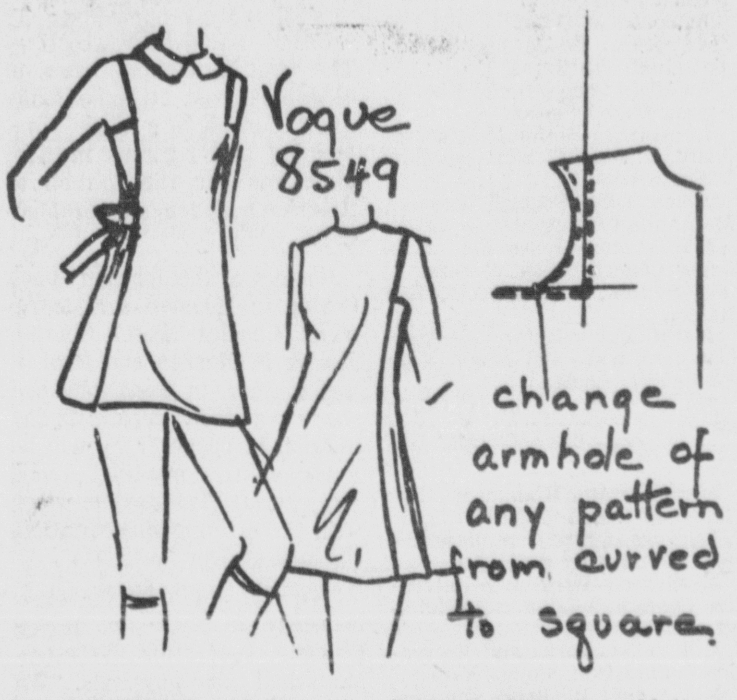
"When sewing set-in sleeves in small children's clothes, it's sometimes difficult to sew with the side seams and sleeve seams already sewn up.

"The solution I have found that works perfectly is to sew the sleeve into your garment from notch to notch over the cap of the sleeve, while the sleeve and garment are still flat. Then sew the side seam of the garment and the underarm seam of the sleeve. Now pin the balance of the sleeve into the armhole and machine stitch from notch to notch, at the underarm section. This has worked perfectly for me, in all garments, not just for my children."



DEAR EUNICE,

I would like to adapt a regular coat collar to one similar to those on purchased raincoats. They seem to have an extra strip of fabric attached to the neckline of the coat. The collar is attached to this, rather than to the neckline seam. Can I simply add a strip of fabric for this effect?

MRS. L. M.

DEAR MRS. L. M.,

The effect you are referring to is created with a "collar stand" similar to the type used in men's shirts. I wouldn't suggest you simply cut a strip of fabric and apply it without any guidelines unless you are a very experienced seamstress.

Today, you will find many shirt-jackets that can be worn as suits or short coats. Buy one of these and use the neck application on your pattern by placing the two necklines of the patterns over each other to check the cutting line at the neck. Your neckline must be cut the same as for the pattern you will be using, including the neckband and collar.

It isn't difficult, but it is important to remember that patterns are precision-made and each part is designed to fit the next section perfectly. You can't just cut a new piece with no thought about how it will fit the rest of the garment. It's fun to change garments and the more you experiment the easier it will be. Just keep one point in mind, each part of a pattern is designed to fit that particular pattern, and when interchanged, you will have to take an extra minute to check the way it will affect any other part of the pattern that comes in contact with it.

DEAR EUNICE,

My daughter is to be a bridesmaid this summer and she has a problem of excessive perspiration. Since the gown she will be wearing is sleeveless, what can I do to help her? I can't use the dress shields we normally use.

FRANTIC

DEAR FRANTIC,

Excessive perspiration isn't the only reason for disastrous results in bridesmaids' dresses. It seems that under situations that present stress, everyone is apt to perspire. I personally have seen many weddings almost ruined by the obvious moisture under the arms. It's caused by nerves, but hang on, there is a cure.

After the dressses are completed, test my method before you apply it to your gown, although we have used it on the finest silks and satins with excellent results. Purchase a can of fabric finish spray, the kind used for water-repellency. Lightly spray the underarm section of your gown, both inside and outside. When it dries, you can repeat the same thing. Do not hold the spray too close to garment. If it works perfectly on your sample of fabric, you will not have to worry about using it on the gowns. This can actually be used for any of your garments, not just for weddings or evening clothes. Please let me know how it has worked for you, I love your letters.

For professional-looking set-in sleeves you will want to try Eunice Farmer's sleeve methods in her informative booklet "All About Sleeves." To obtain your booklet send 10 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Eunice Farmer in care of the Independent-Journal.

Sausalito townhome living has just hit a new low.
These homes are all built in and around the hills, and they all have views (some better than others). The natural wood exteriors and architecture are in keeping with the beauty of the area. And these two and three level homes have other features. Like a wood burning fireplace. And private decks.
The townhome ownership concept gives you all the ownership benefits for about the same monthly amount you may be paying for rent. There are two and three bedroom units with 1½ and 2½ bathrooms respectively. Prices range from $43,950 to $52,450. But hurry. Sausalito never looked this good.
From Northbound 101, take the Rodeo Exit and follow the signs. From Southbound 101, take the Sausalito Exit, turn right at Bridgeway and then right on Nevada.

Frog Entry Of 2,000 Is Expected

ANGELS CAMP (UPI) — Nearly 80,000 persons are expected to jam this once booming gold mining camp May 17-20 to watch 2,000 bullfrogs compete in the century-old Jumping Frog Jubilee.

This tiny Gold Rush town of 3,000 was the setting Mark Twain used in his short story, "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" — the basis for the annual frog jumping contest.

To win the jubilee's top prize money of $1,200 a frog must beat the world record jump set in 1966 by a frog named Ripper who leaped 19 feet 3 and 1-3 inches. Owners of Ripper were Bill Proctor and Leonard Hall of Lafayette.

If a world record is not set, the final purse will be only $300.

Bob Maxwell, a spokesman for the jubilee, said anyone can enter a frog for a $2 fee and more than half the contestants are youngsters.

The Skylab Crew Said Fit, Ready

Doctors at the Johnson Space Center in Houston said astronauts Charles (Pete) Conrad, Joseph P. Kerwin and Paul J. Weitz were in good physical shape for their record 28-day mission in space. They will be launched in a modified Apollo ferry craft Tuesday to dock with the orbiting space station, the largest ever flown.

"We feel confident the crew is ready to fly," Dr. Royce Hawkins said after the astronauts had their physicals. "We see no medical problems that would impact Tuesday's launch."

A massive Saturn 5 rocket will thrust the 84-ton Skylab into a 269-mile-high Earth orbit at 1:30 p.m. EDT Monday for the start of eight months of space exploration. The three astronauts will be carried atop a Saturn 1B rocket 23 ½ hours later.

Conrad, Kerwin and Weitz were spending their last day off at home before launch, and were to fly to the cape Sunday. They have been in semiquarantine for three weeks to keep them from contracting any infections or illness.

The astronauts have been eating Skylab food since they began their isolation so doctors can gather data to compare to tests during and after the mission.

Testing man's ability to stand prolonged space journeys is one of Skylab's major objectives, along with detailed study of the Earth and sun. Two other three-man crews will fly to the lab for 56 days each later this year.

To Return Home

MADRID (UPI) — Former Argentine President Juan Peron will return home in July or earlier to direct his Justicialist Party, Governor-elect Juan Manuel Irrazabal of Misiones province in Argentina said yesterday.

PROPERTY FINANCING EXPLAINED

A mortgage, or note and deed of trust, is a contract which makes property the security for payment of a loan. The property is said to be "hypothecated", which means to give something as security while retaining the right of use.

There are several types of mortgage loans, any of which may be negotiated under certain conditions. Interest rates are of course subject to the pressures of the general money market. FHA, VA, and Cal Vet are guaranteed by government agencies.

The sale of a home can be complicated for the seller as well as the buyer. For instance, when selling a home, what pitfalls do you look for in negotiating a "second"? In order to protect your own interest when buying or selling property, always deal with a member office of the Marin County Board of Realtors.

In selling a home, use the Multiple Listing Service. You'll save time, trouble, and may well realize a higher price for your property than if you tried to sell it yourself. Remember the member offices of the Marin County Board of Realtors. Your Real Estate Professionals.

Apartments For Rent (Unfurnished)—2720

Is your apartment or house standing vacant — and losing you money?

Have you ever thought about how much money you lose each day or week your apartment stands vacant? Here's a chart to point out the drain on your income:

YOU ARE LOSING

If Your Monthly Rental Price Is:	Every Day	Every Week	Every Two Weeks
$150	$ 5.00	$35.00	$70.00
175	5.83	40.81	81.62
200	6.67	46.69	93.38
225	7.50	52.50	105.00
250	8.33	58.31	116.62
275	9.16	64.12	128.24
300	10.00	70.00	140.00
325	10.83	75.81	151.62

Add to this the cost of maintaining a vacant apartment and you have an even larger loss. Doesn't it make sense to: FIRST, run an I-J Classified ad, & SECOND, to take a little time and run a BETTER ad — more benefits, more discription, less abbreviations (82% of readers don't know the meaning of AEK).

Angela Davis Forms An Activist Group

CHICAGO (UPI) — Avowed Communist and political activist Angela Davis has formed a group called "Against Racist and Political Repression."

Miss Davis, flanked by two former convicts, an indicted minister and American Indiah Movement (AIM) leader Clyde Bellecourt, told a news conference yesterday that her organization's goal will be to build mass support.

"We are talking about defending those rights we are supposed to enjoy," she said.

Miss Davis said details of the organization will be worked out this weekend at a "founding conference" attended by members of more than 500 groups, including the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, National Council of Churches, and the Meatcutters and Butchers Union.

Asked how such a large, diverse group could expect to form a unified organization, Miss Davis replied, "It does not presume to be a political party or to defend a political ideology. Some of us may be revolutionaries. Some of us may be radical Democrats, but all of us have a common goal of ending repression."

She said she hopes the organization will draw the kind of support she did last year during her trial on charges of murder and kidnap in connection with the Marin County Courthouse shootout that resulted in four deaths, including a judge. She was acquitted.

Doomsday In Marin—A 'Quake' Hits

HELICOPTER RESCUE — Rescue workers hustle two persons on stretchers from a Hamilton Air Force Base helicopter to waiting doctors at Marin General Hospital. The airborne rescue of persons hurt in a bus crash in West Marin was part of the county's first full-blown earthquake disaster drill, in which volunteers played the parts of the wounded to test emergency medical services in the event of a real earthquake.

According to the scenario for Marin's first full-blown earthquake disaster drill, the earth convulsed along the San Andreas Fault in West Marin at 2 p.m. yesterday and shock waves rattled San Rafael High School, collapsing a portion of the school's cafeteria. (Other disaster stories, pictures, page 1.)

Inside, at about 2:05 p.m., 75 persons playing the parts of the wounded began screaming in mock terror and pain on cue as the school alarm sounded.

Three young girls, their faces and limbs bleeding and broken, burst out the front doors and fell to the pavement as newsmen with television and still cameras jostled for position.

The other injured, wearing elaborate makeup that had been applied by students from the College of Marin, lay on the cafeteria floor amid overturned tables and toppled trash cans.

The wounded, recruited from College of Marin and San Rafael High School plus some volunteer adults, writhed and groaned, each playing out the symptoms of his particular degree of injury.

The San Rafael Fire Department arrived first, within minutes of the initial shock of the mock disaster. Firemen clamped resuscitators over the mouths of some, began applying gauze bandages and splints to others.

Police barked orders at student spectators to move back while the first few members of two medical "triage" teams filtered through the bodies and confusion and began to treat the wounded. They arrived about 2:26 p.m.

Although it was all a drill, the wounded had been so realistically made up and took their parts in the drama so seriously, that it would have been difficult for the casual passerby to tell it from the real thing.

"I need 10 volunteers," the head of one of the triage teams shouted out the front door at high school students milling outside. "Take these tags, write down the names of those hurt and put the tags on the bodies," he said as the volunteers hustled inside.

By 2:30 p.m., 30 minutes after the start of the exercise and the floor still littered with unattended bodies, the first white-uniformed ambulance attendants arrived.

Two ambulances, one from United and one from Bay Cities ambulance services, backed up to the doors of the cafeteria as the triage teams sorted the wounded, treating the more seriously injured first and loading them on stretchers.

By 2:40 p.m., the first victim was placed inside the first ambulance and by 2:44 p.m. the ambulance was on its way to the hospital. The injured were to be taken to one of three hospitals available — Ross General, Marin General or Kaiser Foundation Hospital.

"The triage teams arrived very quickly," said Richard Bettini, coordinator of the medical end of the disaster plan, "considering they had to be phoned individually at their offices."

Each team was made up of nine members, including three doctors, one a medical officer who headed the team, two nurses, two veterinarians and two dentists, Bettini said.

By 2:50 p.m., bodies on stretchers were lined up on the sidewalk in front of the cafeteria. Most had been given first aid and wore tags giving their names and the extent of their injuries. Some tags had red stickers, identifying the most critical who were to be hospitalized first.

At 2:55 p.m., the second ambulance departed for the hospital carrying four injured.

The ambulatory wounded were hustled onto a school bus that sat in the hot sun on an asphalt parking lot beside the cafeteria. Although it was nearly full with victims with varying degrees of injury, it was not driven from the lot.

Members of the VHF Expeditionary Society, an amateur radio club, were at each of three disaster sites to coordinate ambulances and pass on information from the communications center.

At 3:17 p.m., an hour and 17 minutes after the start, a third ambulance arrived and backed up to the cafeteria doors. By 3:24 it was gone, but there was only room for four victims plus one who rode sitting up in the driver's compartment.

By 3:30 p.m., 33 injured had been taken to hospitals. Five were known dead, many were aboard the bus which still stood in the lot and still others lay on stretchers on the ground.

"We could use more ambulances," coordinator Bettini said.

At 3:33, a United ambulance arrived, followed at 3:35 by one from Bay Cities.

One official, glancing down at a woman on a stretcher, indicated that she could get up and either get aboard the bus or wait for room in an ambulance.

"Nothing doing," she said. "I'm in shock and I'm timing you to see how long it takes you to get me out of here."

The communications center at the Civic Center reported that rescue operations at San Rafael High School were wrapped up at 4 p.m., two hours later.

Marin General Gears For Cases

By PATRICIA PERRY

Marin General Hospital authorities were notified at 2:30 p.m. yesterday that 30 stretcher cases would be sent from San Rafael High School where the simulated earthquake had hit hard. No indication of the type of injuries suffered was given.

"That's to be expected," said hospital administrator Ray K. Bolinger. "You'll just get sketchy information at the beginning."

The hospital immediately launched into "Triage Phase I," its disaster drill when 30 or less disaster victims are admitted.

There already were 11 doctors in the hospital, including chief of staff Dr. William Clark, who directed operations.

"Wheelchairs and wheeled stretchers were placed in readiness and doctors, nurses and stretcher bearers waited. And waited. And waited.

The first ambulance arrived at 2:55 p.m., bearing four simulated patients, realistically made-up students who groaned and screamed as a doctor, assisted by enthusiastic nurses, gave each a quick examination before they were taken to either the emergency room, a ward or the operating room. Most went to the emergency room.

Shortly before 3 p.m. the hospital was notified that a helicopter bringing five serious injured patients from a West Marin bus mishap would land in the field next to the employees' parking lot on Bon Air Road.

The helicopter, from Hamilton Air Force Base, landed at 3:25 p.m. Laurence A. Weinstein from the county office of emergency services said the long time lapse was caused by transportation and communication difficulties in West Marin.

After the bus was supposed to have overturned one mile north of Point Reyes Station, said Weinstein, an emergency center was set up at West Marin School, and workers commandeered vehicles.

"The helicopter had no trouble getting from Hamilton to West Marin," said Weinstein, "but no one remembered to call for it." He said Kirby ultimately called for the helicopter at 2:40 p.m., or some 40 minutes after the exercise began.

The five stretcher cases were unloaded onto the grass, and after a quick examination by a doctor, transported up to the hospital by the old ambulance and in the back of the pickup truck.

In the hospital's emergency room, a blackboard listed the victims, their injuries, where they went and which doctors was working on them.

By 3:45 p.m. two hadd died - one in the operating room - and four were still in surgery.

"I definitely need a bigger blackboard," complained Dr. Clark, as he agreed to take more patients, an overflow from Kaiser Foundation Hospital.

DISASTER VICTIMS — A Red Cross nurse rushes to the aid of two young girls who stumbled screaming and bleeding from the cafeteria at San Rafael High School yesterday in a disaster drill simulating an earthquake. A total of 75 persons realistically made up to appear as if they had been hurt in a building cave-in, played the parts of the dead and injured. (Independent-Journal photo by Jim Kean)

FAST AID — Attendants are a blur as they whisk a volunteer playing the part of a disaster victim on a gurney down a corridor at Ross General Hospital. The scene was part of Marin's first full-scale earthquake disaster drill designed to test emergency medical preparedness. The exercise simulated a quake in West Marin and the unjuries and destruction predicted to follow.

The 'Actors' Win Plaudits For Roles

BY FRANK FARRARA

The multipurpose room at Hill Junior High School in Novato wasn't the place for anyone with a weak stomach at about 2 p.m. yesterday.

Fifty "victims" injured in the "collapse" of the building as part of a disaster drill started groaning, screaming and thrashing about.

Simulated blooksoaked clothing smeared the floor, and broken bones (animal bones held to human limbs with mortician's wax) protruded from bodies lying about the room.

Cries of "I'm dying . . . help . . . help me . . . and do something" rang out with a tone of authenticity.

The alarm went out to the Novato Fire Department and firemen arrived within minutes and started carrying and escorting victims outside to a lawn area.

Explorer Scouts from the Novato Law Enforcement Post, male and female, joined in aiding the victims and Novato police took over traffic and crowd control.

All victims were removed from the "wrecked building" by 2:13 and the medical team, including doctors, started aiding the victims and sorting them out for priority for treatment.

Pink disaster tags were placed on the victims, some marked with the red label for immediate attention and others with a black label for "delayed" attention.

A green-and-white united ambulance arrived at about 2:20 p.m. and stood by while doctors identified the more seriously wounded who were to be taken to Marin General Hospital by ambulance.

A doctor, walking through the array of victims spread out in the shade of a large tree, commented as he walked: "That's third degrees burn . . . and that's major surgery . . . she goes to Marin General."

Elsewhere medical teams bandaged heads and placed cardboard splints on broken limbs, while scouts filled out information on the disaster tags.

A Novato Fire Department pickup truck starting hauling less seriously injured victims to Novato General Hospital and Indian Valley Medical Clinic, and some ambulatory victims walked to the nearby Medical center.

About 20 victims were loaded or walked aboard a large school bus and taken to Kaiser Foundation Hospital in San Rafael, and the ambulance, carrying the five more seriously injured, left for Marin General.

At about 3:07 p.m. all but one victim had been removed and several minutes later, he was picked up by the fire department's pickup.

By 3:15, 75 minutes after the "disaster," all that remained were the bandage wrappings on the lawn that were being cleaned up by a group of students who had been sitting nearby watching the action.

OF GOD AND MAN

Decision On Sainthood Of Pope John Awaited

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International

Next month marks the 10th anniversary of the death of Angelo Roncalli, possibly the greatest Christian leader of the century.

Who was Angelo Roncalli? Only a small fraction of the people of the world were aware that was his given name. In the latter years of his life, he was better known affectionately to millions as Papa John —"Papa Giovanni" to Romans. To the world at large he was Pope John XXIII.

During a brief reign of less than five years on the papal throne, he made more profound and far-reaching contributions to the health of the Christian movement than any pope of recent history.

Consider only a few of his achievements:

—He ended 500 years of cold war among Christians and created between Catholics and Protestants a new "ecumenical spirit" of mutual respect and cooperation.

—He won worldwide respect and affection, not only from Christians of every denomination, but from Jews, Moslems, Hindus, Buddhists, humanists and Marxists.

—He restored to the papacy, through the sheer power of his personal goodness, a prestige it had not enjoyed since the time of the Borgias.

There have been widespread suggestions that Pope John be named a saint. The official word from the papal court in Rome is that the "cause" of John XXIII —that is, the question of whether he was truly a saint —is being "investigated through normal procedures."

Some are accusing the Vatican of stalling. Critics — and there are many —say cardinals of the Roman Curia who never approved of Pope John's reforms hope to postpone indefinitely giving them the posthumous endorsement implied by canonization.

There is another consideration that doubtless enters into the Vatican's procrastination.

Pope Paul VI, who was Pope John's chosen successor, has never achieved the affection and respect of his predecessor.

Pope Paul's critics say that for him to declare his predecessor a saint —which he has authority to do any time he sees fit —would dramatize an eclipse of papal prestige which has taken place since John's death.

While some may call him a poor pope, Paul VI is a good man, and he certainly would not stoop personally to withholding canonization of John XXIII in order to protect his own vanity.

But he doesn't have to do it personally. He has only to listen to the voices of Curia courtiers who tell him that the "cause" is being handled "in the normal and proper way." That explanation probably sounds reasonable to Paul VI, who once was a Vatican bureaucrat himself.

While John XXIII remains officially uncanonized, millions of Catholics and non-Catholics already have proclaimed in their hearts the saintliness of this peasant from Bergamo who was one of the most humble, compassionate and courageous figures the church has produced since Francis of Assissi.

Dr. Herschel Hobbs To Lead Lecture Day

Dr. Herschel H. Hobbs, visiting professor of preaching at Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, will be Lecture-Dialogue Day guest at the Seminary May 17, in Room 210, W. T. Conner Hall, beginning at 9:50 a.m.

The public is invited to hear the former president of the 12-million-member Southern Baptist Convention speak and lead the discussion. Topic for the day will be "The Baptist Faith and Message," the official statement of faith adopted by the SBC in 1963.

Dr. Hobbs was appointed chairman of the committee in the 1962 SBC Convention held in San Francisco. The document was then adopted by the 1963 Convention in Kansas City, Mo. Presidents of state Southern Baptist Conventions at that time made up the committee.

"I have been asked to evaluate the statement," Dr. Hobbs said, "and to discuss the conditions which prompted the statement."

Dr. Hobbs has served as principal preacher for the International Baptist Hour radio broadcast since 1958. He served as vice president of the Baptist World Alliance from 1965 - 70.

He has authored 35 books and contributed to numerous volumes compiled by others. His more recent works include: "Cosmic Drama: Exposition on the Book of Revelation," 1971; "An Exposition of the Gospel of Mark," 1970; and "Epistles to the Corinthians," 1969.

Hobbs has pastored churches in Alabama, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana and Oklahoma. He is active in civic and community affairs in Oklahoma City where he recently retired after serving for 23 years as pastor of the First Baptist Church.

The guest professor was graduated from Howard College (now Samford University) in Birmingham, Ala. He was awarded the master of theology degree and the Ph.D. in New Testament interpretation by Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky. He is also the recipient of numerous honorary degrees and awards, including being named to the Oklahoma Hall of Fame.

"Rebirth" will focus on modern man's struggle with the material and social influences and pressures which separate man from his spirit and from God, according to Sam Shafer, director.

Shafer said the play is designed to show how Christianity is as well-equipped now as in the past to solve men's problems.

"HAVE WE NOT ALL ONE FATHER? HATH NOT ONE God CREATED US?" Malachi 2:10
A lot of people acknowledge God as Father. But do they really understand the man He made?
As you get a deeper understanding of the Bible, the spiritual nature of man and of all creation appears. Then Christian unity and the brotherhood of man appear in your life, too.
Selections from the Bible and Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy, to be read in our church service this Sunday, will help you understand the Bible's message of brotherly love in a new light.
We'd love to welcome you.

Dodgers' Brewer Sparkles Vs. Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Twice in his pitching career Jim Brewer had surgery performed on his left elbow.

The first time was seven years ago and he came back to be one of the major leagues' most consistent relief pitchers for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The second time was last winter and when spring training began this year, Brewer said he felt he could do it again. But early season problems led to some doubts until a week or so ago when he suddenly started to get batters out with his famed screwball.

Friday night in Candlestick Park, Brewer took charge as in days of old, coming in to snuff out an eighth inning rally and then wrapping things up in the ninth as the Dodgers held on for a 3-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

"This could have been my best performance of the year," said the 35-year-old Brewer after striking out two of the four batters he faced with his screwball.

The Dodgers, with their sixth victory in the last seven games, suddenly are in the National League West race only 4 ½ games behind the pace-setting Giants, whom they face again today and Sunday.

Friday night they needed a break and got it in the sixth when old nemesis Juan Marichal walked two batters and Dave Kingman let a smash to third by Bill Russell go through him. That scored two runs and gave the Dodgers and Al Downing a 2-0 lead. Manny Mota tripled in the eighth and Joe Ferguson scored him with a sacrifice fly.

"I felt real good," said Marichal, "but I was wilder than usual. I couldn't control my fastball. That's why Mota hit one up in his eyes for the triple that beat me."

The way Downing was pitching—a four-hit shutout—it seemed like enough but the Giants rallied for two runs in the eighth to chase him.

Downing gained credit for his fourth victory in five decisions while Brewer picked up his third save. Marichal, who entered the game with a 35-17 lifetime record against the Dodgers, is now 4-3.

Giants' manager Charlie Fox said Ed Goodson probably would replace Kingman at third for the remaining weekend games.

"Errors are part of the game, but there's no doubt that Kingman is pressing at the plate," said Fox.

Blue's Mastery Over Rangers

Combined AP & UPI

ARLINGTON, Tex. — Vida Blue, despite a shaky start and a surprising home run by Vic Harris, maintains his two-year mastery over the Texas Rangers today.

The Oakland lefty won his sixth straight game over the Texas Rangers-Washington Senators franchise since he lost the presidential opener in 1971. The Athletics' 4-3 triumph Friday was their fifth in six games and lifted their record to 6-3 for a current road trip.

Blue, who pulled 18,529 fans into Arlington Stadium, was not as sharp as he so often was in his 1971 Cy Young award season, but he had enough to hold the Rangers to three hits through six innings.

Control problems developed and Blue walked five men before giving up a leadoff homer in the seventh inning to 170-pound Vice Harris — his first major league round-tripper.

That made the score 4-3, and Oakland Manager Dick Williams lifted Blue in favor of Rollie Fingers, who immediately gave up a single to Ken Suarez. Fingers then retired the last nine Rangers to record his second save.

"Vida threw a lot of pitches — over 100 in six innings," said Williams. "It was that more than the Harris homer that made me take him out."

The A's started the game as if they would repeat Thursday night's 17-2 triumph over the Rangers. Oakland scored one run in each of the first four innings, with Joe Rudi and Dick Green getting two RBI apiece.

But Don Stanhouse shut out the A's on two hits the last five innings. The 22-year-old right-hander relieved starter and loser Rich Hand, 2-2, with two outs in the third inning and a run in.

The only run Stanhouse allowed was in the fourth, when Bert Campaneris sliced a triple just inside the right field foul line and scored on Rudi's sacrifice fly. Rudi also doubled home Campaneris in the first after the Oakland shortstop opened the game with a single off Hand.

Green's RBI came in the second and third innings. He doubled home Ray Fosse after the Oakland catcher had doubled to start the second inning. In the third, Green singled home Reggie Jackson.

Williams did not consider lifting Blue in the first, saying he figured his team could continue to score.

"We should have scored a lot more runs in the first. A great catch by Maddox let them off the hook," he said.

Oakland has now won three straight games and moved into third place in the American League West with a 16-14 record.

In tonight's third game of the series, John Odom (0-5) of the A's hurls against Pete Broberg (0-3) of Texas.

Russell Takes Over NBA Sonics

SEATTLE (UPI) — Bill Russell, one of best defensive centers to ever play pro basketball, returns to the sport after a four-year absence as coach and general manager of the Seattle SuperSonics.

The former superstar and coach of the Boston Celtics signed a five-year contract Friday with the Sonics of the National Basketball Association. Terms were not disclosed.

DOMINANT

Sam Schulman, president and owner of the Sonics, called Russell "the most dominant player the game has known and the finest coach in the game's history."

As a player, Russell led the Celtics to seven NBA titles and he later posted a 162-83 record as a coach while the Celtics won two more NBA championships.

REPLACEMENTS

He replaces Tom Nissalke, who was fired in January, as the coach and succeeds Bob Houbregs as general manager. Houbregs quit last week.

In recent years, Russell has been a radio and television sports commentator. He just concluded the season as commentator on ABC Television's NBA Game of the Week.

WORST SEASON

In his return to the game, Russell takes over a team which struggled through the worst season of its brief history.

The poor performance was despite the signing by Schulman of highly touted players for large sums of money. The players have failed to mold into a team that could provide Schulman with a championship.

In Los Angeles, Russell said: "I'm going to Seattle with an open mind about the players. I'll take a look at everybody and see what they can or can't do.

"I know what I'd like to have but nobody can have all they like to have. I'll have to take what I have and make the most of it."

Russell said he saw the Sonics play only once last season.

He promised to be a disciplinarian, quipping, "I'm going to take a baseball bat with me."

SARATOGA — The College of Marin doubles tennis team of Mark Rodnick and Bill Kinser was scheduled to play semifinal and hopefully final matches today in the Northern California championships at West Valley College's new facilities here, still under construction.

Kinser and Rodnick, seeded sixth whipped three opponents Thursday and yesterday after an opening-round bye, and were to face third-seeded Kurt Nielsen and Bruce Winn of the College of the Sequoias in the semis. Some 48 doubles teams were entered.

Regardless of their performance today, Rodnick and Kinser have qualified for the state tournament next Friday and Saturday at Canada College in Redwood City.

Rodnick was defeated in the third round of singles competition and the other Tar doubles qualifier, Greg Kalemba and Terry Timmons, fell in the second round.

2 HAMILTON BOXERS IN FINALS TONIGHT

BOSTON (UPI) — Two Hamilton Air Force boxers have reached the finals in the National Amateur Athletic Union boxing championships here, but neither 106-pounder Claudio (Chicky) Rivera or 156-pounder Jerome Bennett has an easy task in securing a title tonight.

Rivera decisioned John Barr Jr. of the Middle Atlantic region Friday night to earn the right to meet favored Albert Sandovak of the South Pacific Region tonight.

Sandovak knocked out Mike Britton of the Southwest at 2:59 of the first round Friday night to reach the finals. Britton was carried out on a stretcher and taken to a local hospital for observation. His condition was not considered serious.

Rivera's Hamilton colleague Bennett took a decision from John Rotondo of the Adirondack Club Friday night to quality for a title fight tonight against Dale Grant, brother of Munich Olympics' gold medalist Sugar Ray Seales.

Indy Driver Pollard Is Killed In Crash

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — Art Pollard, 46, veteran Medford, Ore., race driver, was killed today when his car crashed and burned in a practice run for the 500-mile auto race of May 28.

Pollard, a grandfather and the oldest driver entered in a race in which some observers expected 200 m.p.h. laps, was clocked at 191.4 miles per hour on the lap before his car, a Dan Gurney Eagle, smashed into a wall. Pollard hit the barrier with the right front side of his car.

His death was announced by hospital officials.

The automobile burst into flame, spun through the air and back onto the track. He was trapped in the car for a brief time.

Pollard had been a qualifier for last year's race but suffered a broken leg in a practice accident. His place in 1972 had been taken by Wally Dallenbach, who finished in 33rd and last place.

Pulled from the wrecked car, Pollard was taken first to the infield hospital and then to Memorial Hospital, where his death was announced. Dr. Thomas Hanna, Speedway physician, said he had suffered flame inhalation, burns of the body and a fractured right arm.

Terra Linda Wins

Undefeated right-hander Mike Bird won his seventh game yesterday, with help from Larry DelBucchi's two hits and two runs batted in, as Terra Linda High School's junior varsity baseball team improved its Marin County Athletic League record to 11-1 with a 6-3 victory over visiting Marin Catholic.

Redwood '9' Wins, Takes Championship

Gondak's Double Tips Tam

When Matt Gondak drilled a double with one man out in the seventh inning yesterday afternoon, he gave Redwood High School two runs, a victory, a baseball championship and a place in the history books.

Gondak's bases-loaded hit to left field enabled the Giants to overcome a two-run rally by Tamalpais in the top of the seventh and post a 4-3 Marin County Athletic League victory, clinching the undisputed championship.

Redwood stands 11-1 with two games left on the schedule, while second-place Novato is 8-4. Thus, Redwood became the first team in the 14-year history of the MCAL to win back-to-back titles, according to coach Al Endriss. The Giants (21-4) also tied a school mark for victories set by the 1965 team (21-5).

The triumph propelled them into the Redwood High Baseball Tournament of Champions along with seven other league titleholders from the Bay Area May 24-26 at Albert Field.

"There's no question Gene Frey and Mark Ruggles carried us pitching-wise until past Easter," said Endriss, "but then up steps the big sophomore, Eddie Andersen, and he really made the difference."

Endriss praised the hitting of first baseman Ross Secor and second sacker Daryl Edralin in the first half of the season, and center fielder Mike Connor, third baseman Phil Bacigalupi and outfielder Gondak later.

Defensively, he singled out left fielder Jeff Vogel and catcher Doug Hartman for consistent play and noted that shortstop Gary LaTorre, filling a hole vacated by graduated Scott Barrie, made only one error in league competition.

If that sounds like the whole starting lineup, it's because it is. Most were present on the 12-2 team which won the title last year, and Hartman, Bacigalupi, LaTorre, Vogel and Andersen will return next year.

SAN RAFAEL BOWS

Novato Whips Baseball Foe

Novato High School struck for six runs in the third inning to defeat San Rafael yesterday, 10-3, in the battle for second place in Marin County Athletic League baseball.

The victory at Albert Field gave Novato an 8-4 record and dropped San Rafael to third at 7-5. It was the sixth win in the Hornets' last seven games and the Bulldogs' fourth defeat in five tries.

Stan Conte singled for one run, Tom Conklin singled home two more, and subsequent tallies came home on a throwing error and bases-loaded walks to winning pitcher Ray Stratford and Dave Brazell in the Novato uprising.

Stratford picked up his fourth victory of the year against one defeat, tying him for second in the MCAL in wins. He survived a three-run San Rafael fourth which saw Steve D'Ambra single home one run, Craig Saunders walk with the bases loaded for another and John Sims (who was three for three) single across the third.

San Marin Nine Defeats Drake

Aided by what coach Ron Butori called "good fielding support from his teammates," San Marin High School pitcher Matt Womack went the distance in his first start of the Marin County Athletic League season and set down visiting Drake on four hits yesterday, 4-1.

San Marin scored in the first inning when Drake's catcher made a throwing error during an attempted double steal with runners on first and third. Ed LaRocque's squeeze bunt accounted for another run in the second, and in the third Chris Purdy's ground single up the middle scored one man from third and another came in when Drake's center fielder bobbled the ball.

Defense gems included a play at the plate on a bases-loaded squeeze in the fifth inning, and a pickoff and double play on successive plays inthe sixty.

Margaret Vs. Riggs Tomorrow

RAMONA, Calif. (UPI) — Bobby Riggs is a 7-5 favorite to defeat Margaret Court Sunday in their $30,000 tennis match, a match which has caught the fancy of sportsmen the world over, possibly because they do not know what to expect. The match will be televised at 12:30 p.m. (PDT) on Channel 5.

Mrs. Court, although risking none of her own money, is risking the drive by women players to obtain higher purses. The 30-year-old mother has earned more than $80,000 playing tennis this year.

She has won 89 of her last 91 matches and has won 21 Big Four tournaments.

Can she win?

"I wouldn't go into it if I didn't think so," she said.

Riggs, at age 55, won the Wimbledon title in 1939. He is known for risking a few quid on events of this sort and he is risking a little "face" too as he claims women do not play good tennis.

Riggs originally put up $5,000, winner-take-all, in challenging the top women players. He has plugged the match from its inception, especially since CBS Television entered the picture and helped boost the purse.

Although frequently complaining about old age and poor physical condition, he confides, "I'll be very surprised if I lose."

"Look," he said, "I play regularly and sometimes I play several matches on the same day. There's no way I'm going to get tired.

"I have the shots to make her

OVER AAU TEAM

Russians End Tour With Cage Victory

"They just overpowered us and we tired out," University of Kentucky cage star Kevin Grevey said. "I hate to make excuses but I just did get over that tonsillectomy."

The 6-foot-6 Greivey had nothing to be ashamed of as he contributed 26 points to the Marathon cause along with 21 by fellow Wildcat Jim Andrews.

The Russians overcame an early 18-11 deficit and with three key buckets by 6-6 forward Aleksandr Salnikov during a 17-0 spree. The Russians took a 37-23 advantage with a little over five minutes remaining in the first half.

At halftime the Russians held a 51-40 lead over a visibly tired group of AAU national champs before 4,000 fans at Henry Clay High School here.

In the second half the Russians took advantage of the tired American squad and at one stretch surged to a lead of 30 points 93-63 with 8:40 left in the contest.

The Russians, which ended their American tour with a 3-4 record, boasted only three members from the team which defeated the American Olympic team at Munich last year in the disputed 51-50 game.

Combined AP & UPI

ALBANY — Golden Gate Fields will try again this weekend to get Sunday racing off the ground. The track's first scheduled Sunday program was called off last weekend by a labor dispute, since settled. The $20,000 Linda Chica Stakes, a turf course event for 3-year-old fillies, will be Sunday's feature race.

The $20,000 Alameda Claiming Stakes was the feature of today's program.

Under the new Golden Gate Fields schedule, there will be racing every day except Tuesdays and Wednesdays through the end of the meeting June 17.

Tennis

TOKYO — Americans Billie Jean King and Nancy Richey Gunter will play Sunday for the $8,400 first prize in the $30,000 Toray Sillook Women's Professional Tennis Tournament.

Mrs. King of Berkeley defeated Rosemary Casals of Sausalito, also of the United States, 6-3, 7-6 and Mrs. Gunter of Dallas eliminated Francoise Durr of France 6-4, 6-2 in the semifinals today before 4,000 spectators at the Nihon University Auditorium.

MEXICO CITY — The United States needed a Solomon to earn a split of its first two singles matches against Mexico Friday in the Davis Cup North American Zone Finals. After Tom Gorman of Seattle, Wash., bowed to Raul Ramirez, 6-4, 6-2, 6-3, Harold Solomon of Silver Spring, Md., came back to whip Joaquin Loyo-Mayo, 7-5, 6-4, 7-5. The doubles competition will be held Saturday with the final two singles matches set for Sunday.

DALLAS — Stan Smith survived two break points in the third set and overcame unaccustomed serving difficulty, Friday Night to defeat Rod Laver 4-6, 6-4, 7-6, 7-5 and move into the finals of the World Championship Tennis Tournament.

Baseball

REDWOOD CITY — Former New York Yankee pitching star Don Larsen, who in 1956 pitched the only perfect World Series baseball game, Friday filed a $1 million damage suit against a baseball manufacturing firm he alleges is using his name without his consent.

Larsen, of Morgan Hill, Calif., named the Tennessee-based Lannom Manufacturing Co. as defendant in the suit, filed in the San Mateo County Superior Court. The suit contends that the firm is using Larsen's autograph on its baseballs.

Track-Field

HAYWARD — Rochelle Davis of Texas Women's College and Veronica Harris of Chicago State won trial heats in the 100-yard dash in 10.7 seconds Friday at the Women's National Track and Field Championships to share the national record.

The old mark of 10.8 was set by Pat Hawkins of Long Island University in 1972.

Another national record was set in the 440 relay when a team from Texas Womens College won a heat in 46.7, breaking the old mark of 48.5 set by Alcorn A&M in 1970.

Drug Abuse Deemed 'Rampant' In Pros

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congressional investigators said Friday there is "widespread and rampant" use and abuse of drugs in professional sports and demanded lifetime bans for drug users.

The investigations subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee said, "Such drug use exists, in varying degrees, in all sports and levels of competition with few exceptions."

Chairman Harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., said the professional leagues should consider "barring for life" the drug abusers. No names or teams were mentioned in the report.

Albert J. McGrath, a member of the subcommittee staff, said the year-long study "covered a majority of the teams" in professional sports. He said a similar study soon will be initiated into amateur sports.

McGrath gave no figures but said drug use among pro athletes was "widespread and rampant at all levels."

The drugs used most, he said, are amphetamines, stimulants and anabolic steroids, taken to increase weight and strength temporarily.

"In some instances, the degree of improper drug use—primarily amphetamines and anabolic steroids—can only be described as alarming," McGrath said in a news release.

Staggers suggested that all professional teams be required to report any drug incidents to league headquarters.

"All players should be required to notify their team physician of any drugs or other medication which they are obtaining from other than team sources," he said.

"And moreover, stringent penalties for illegal use, for example, fines, suspensions or even barring for life, if warranted, should be administered. The same penalities should be applied to team physicians, trainers, coaches and other personnel involved," he said.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, Football Commissioner Pete Rozelle and a National Basketball Association official all said their leagues have long supported anti-drug programs.

"I don't think it's a serious problem in baseball," Kuhn said. "Perhaps that's because ours is not a violent sport. But we're aware that we have to keep a constant vigil as to the dangers of drug use."

"We have conducted drug seminars during spring training," Kuhn added. "We have also spent a substantial sum on a comprehensive booklet outlining the dangers of drug usage. It's been sent to all the players and officials in major and minor leagues."

Rozelle pointed out that a poster warning of the dangers of drug use is mandatory for all NFL dressing rooms while Jack Joyce, NBA secutity director, said that the moral turpitude clause in the league's constitution and by-laws gave it power to deal with drug offenders.

Providence Group Seeks ABA Tams

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — A group of Providence businessmen has collected enough money to buy the franchise of the Memphis Tams of the American Baksetball Association and has entered into negotiations with Tams' owner Charles O. Finley.

"We have raised the $1.8 million purchase price for the Tams. We have got 12 people willing to bring a professional team to Providence," said Paul Lynch, who organized efforts last year to buy the Kentucky Colonels.

"Now it's up to Finley whether we will get the team," Lynch said Friday. However, Finley, who currently is involved in a squabble with the ABA Board of Governors, has backed off slightly on the deal, and time is running short.

Lynch said there was a possibility that the team could split its home games among three New England cities, Providence, Hartford and New Haven, Conn.

Lynch said he will travel to New York Monday to talk to Robert Carlson, president of the ABA, to discuss the possibility of beginning a new franchise at Providence if the Tams deal falls through.

An American Wins Unusual Marathon

LONDON — Since dawn this morning, huge crowds have lined the roads from Windsor Castle to the heart of London, watching the marathon runners complete their agonizing journey in these 1908 Olympic Games.

They've been running for more than three hours and only 28 of the original 75 entrants are still in the competition. The rest have dropped out due to exhaustion.

The end is near. After 26 grueling miles, in a race that has seen many leaders, one man is now running within sight of the stadium.

Italian, Pietri Dorando has held up best among the survivors. He's leading American Johnny Hayes by almost half a minute as he enters the stadium. There is only one lap around the track separating Dorando from an olympic gold medal.

Dorando is in the stadium, but he's dazed and confused. He appears to be barely conscious and is staggering the wrong direction around the track. His body has been pushed beyond the limits of endurance.

In the bedlam, some officials have helped him to his feet and are prodding and half carrying him towards the finish line. He courageously struggles the few remaining yards and is first across the line.

Pietri Dorando's ordeal is over, but he is not the winner of this race. He is disqualified for getting aid from the officials and 20 year old Johnny Hayes is the inheritor of a gold medal for winning the most dramatic marathon race in olympic history.

Rancho Clinches Tie For 3rd Title

Rancho Cotate High School of Rohnert Park clinched a tie for its third consecutive Sonoma County League baseball championship yesterday by drubbing host Healdsburg, 7-3, while rival Analy of Sebastopol was suffering a 4-3 loss to El Molino of Forestville.

Rancho improved its league mark to 8-2 with two games left next week, while Analy dipped to 6-4.

In other games yesterday, Tomales captured its first North Central League II championship since 1967 despite a 5-3 loss to Upper Lake, as chief rival St. Vincent of Petaluma lost an eight-inning, 12-4 donnybrook to Kelseyville. Petaluma was beaten by Hogan of Vallejo in a North Bay League clash, 10-9.

Dave Hubley went two for three and drove in two runs for Rancho. The game was put out of reach with a three-run rally in the third inning when Marshall Brant, Rick Butler and Dan Hubley all smacked doubles, the latter two back-to-back.

Tomales wound up its campaign with a 7-3 league record and 13-5 overall mark. "We jelled' out much better than I thought," said coach Jim Clahan.

The Braves fell behind Upper Lake yesterday, 5-0, but rallied for three runs in the sixth inning on a two-run double by Andy Bordessa and run-scoring single by Mike Camp. It wasn't enough, however.

St. Vincent freshman Ray Cerna hit a two-out, two-run single in the bottom of the seventh to cap a three-run rally and send the Mustangs into extra innings against Kelseyville, but the visitors scored eight unearned runs after two were out in the eighth to win.

Big hit for Kelseyville was a three-run double by Doug Johns which bounced off the third base bag and caromed away. Despite the loss, St. Vincent finished second to Tomales in the NCL II at 6-4 and had a season log of 13-8 with a team which had only three seniors.

Brodie, Pirtle Lead In Golf

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — San Francisco 49ers quarterback John Brodie, who once was a pro golfer for a year, and his partner from Menlo Park, Calif., Skit Pirtle, shot a four under par 68 at tough Spyglass Hill Friday for the lead in the Northern California Golf Association four-ball championship.

The two didn't make a single bogey all the way around the Robert Trent Jones designed course, which usually is the toughest of the three played in the annual Crosby National Pro-Am. Brodie had birdies on the 11th and 12th holes while Pirtle had a bird on the 13th and holed a 220-yard three-wood for an eagle two on the 16th, the first time that has been done at Spyglass Hill.

Pele In Oakland Coliseum June 1

It was announced Thursday that Pele's Santos soccer team will meet Club Deportivo Guadalajara of Mexico in the international exhibition.

Throughout his career, which began at 15 when he was discovered playing soccer barefoot in a remote Brazilian village, Pele has scored over 1,300 goals—more than any other player in history. His skills earn him an income in the $2 million a year range.

Texas Golf Relaxing For Bruce

FORT WORTH, Tex. (UPI) — Playing golf in Texas is relaxing for Bruce Crampton since he is always near what he considers his second home.

The native Australian maintains a pleasant residence in the northern part of Dallas, and if it is all right with the Professional Golfers Association officials, Crampton has a suggestion.

"I'd like to play all the tournaments in Texas," Crampton said Friday. And the reason has become very obvious in the past three weeks.

Since the golf tour has hit the state, Crampton has had only one round over par. He finished fourth in the Byron Nelson Classic in Dallas and won last week's Houston Open.

And going into today's third round of the $150,000 Colonial National Invitation Crampton owns a two-stroke lead over Tom Weiskopf.

Crampton's streak of gold could have been dented Friday, but he survived a shaky start to put together a one-under-par in searing weather over the demanding Colonial Country Club course and that was good for a two round total of fiveunder 135.

Weiskopf added a 68 to his opening round of 69 for his 36-hole 137. One stroke back came defending champion Herry Heard, Lou Graham and Lee Elder. Hale Irwin, Gene Littler and Ken Still were the only other golfers below par, each at one-under 139.

Lee Trevino, who came to this tournament with a continuation of his shoulder problems, slid to a 73 and was at 144. Napa's Ron Cerrudo made the cut with a 148.

run. If stamina becomes a factor, it should be in my favor."

The slightly-built Riggs rarely rushes the net and has little power, relying on placements for his points.

Mrs. Court, nearly six feet tall, has great coordination, good power and a reach which makes her difficult to pass at the net.

Asked about Riggs' reputation for incessant chatter and use of every gimmick in the book, she replied, "I can't say I'm losing any sleep at the thought of meeting him. I've no particular plan in mind. I'll just play my own game."

It should be a fun affair with no hard feelings. Riggs and Mrs. Court are expected to team against Tony Trabert and Karen Hantze Susman in a doubles match following the main event.

Proceeds go to the Diabetes Association. The only other potential losers would be CBS and the promoters in case of rain.

Petaluma's Martinez In Track Victory

SANTA ROSA — Jose Martinez was the lone varsity individual winner for Petaluma High School yesterday in the North Bay League track and field finals, capturing the 220-yard dash in 22.2.

Jon Sisler finished second in the mile and two-mile, Larry David grabbed a third and a fourth in the two hurdle events and Martinez was second in the 440 as the Trojans racked up 41 points to place third behind Montgomery of Santa Rosa (77) and Vallejo (57).

Durocher Debut

NEW YORK (UPI) — Leo Durocher made his major league debut at the age of 19 as a pinch-hitter for the New York Yankees against the Philadelphia Athletics in 1925. Durocher fanned in the 10-0 loss.

Astros' Wilson Throws A Party

By U. P. INTERNATIONAL

Don Wilson sure knows how to throw a "welcome home" party.

Wilson, the top righthander on the Houston Astros' staff, celebrated manager Leo Durocher's return Friday night by stopping Cincinnati on three hits as the Astros scored a 5-1 victory and moved two games ahead of the Reds in the battle for second place in the National League West.

Durocher had been absent from his job since April 20 when he was hospitalized with an intestinal infection. During his absence the team was managed by Preston Gomez and compiled a 13-3 record.

Friday night's game marked the third super performance for Wilson in his last five starts. Wilson, normally a slow starter, two-hit San Diego on April 21 then after two mediocre starts hurled a four-hitter against New York on May 5.

Wilson, now 3-3, credits his good start to an increase in weight. He reported to spring training this year at 235, 10 pounds heavier than in past years. When the Astros broke camp Wilson weighed 223, which was seven pounds heavier than he was a year ago.

"I feel stronger than I have in four seasons," said Wilson.

Wilson, who has hurled two no-hitters in his career, pitched no-hit ball for five innings before Joe Morgan broke the spell with a ground-rule double as the leadoff batter in the sixth. Morgan eventually scored on a single by Johnny Bench to spoil Wilson's shutout bid.

Lee May provided Wilson with all the offensive support he needed when he hit a tworun homer in the second inning. Cesar Cedeno also drove in two runs with a pair of singles.

In other NL games, New York edged Pittsburgh 4-3, St. Louis blanked Montreal 12-0, Los Angeles defeated San Francisco 3-2 and Chicago nipped Philadelphia 4-3. San Diego at Atlanta was rained out.

Baltimore shut out New York 3-0, Boston topped Cleveland 4-2, Kansas City beat Minnesota 6-2, Detroit edged Milwaukee 6-5, Oakland nipped Texas 4-3, and Chicago topped California 7-4 in American League action.

The Mets took over second place in the NL East with their victory over the Pirates but the triumph proved costly as catcher Jerry Grote was lost to the club for at least six weeks with a broken arm. It was another in a long line of injuries that have hit the Mets so far this season.

Grote suffered the injury when he was struck with a pitch thrown by reliever Ramon Hernandez in the seventh inning. Mets' outfielder Rusty Staub also was hit on the hand by Hernandez in the same inning but x-rays proved negative. Staub missed most of last season with a broken hand suffered when he was hit by a pitch.

The two hit batsmen were instrumental in the Mets' pushing across what proved to be the winning run in the seventh. Bud Harrelson got the run home when he drew a bases-loaded walk. Tug McGraw preserved the victory for Harry Parker, now 3-0, with 2 2-3 innings of hitless relief. Al Oliver had a homer for the Pirates.

Alan Foster pitched a fourhitter and his teammates backed him with 15 hits as the Cardinals routed the Expos. Foster allowed only one hit over the final seven innings to win his first game of the year. Mike Tyson paced the Cards' attack with three hits and two runs batted in.

Randy Hundley drove in two runs with a double and a homer to spark the Cubs' triumph over the Phillies. Chicago's Glenn Beckert stretched his hitting streak to 20 games with a single in the second inning.

Crealy Vs. Mayer In Net Match

PORTOLA VALLEY, Calif. (UPI) — Dick Crealy of Australia and defending champion Sandy Mayer of Stanford clash in today's semifinals of the $10,000 73rd annual California State Tennis Championships as expected, but the other match is the surprise.

Tom Leonard of Arcadia Calif. upset Jeff Borowiak of Berkeley, Calif., 7-5, 6-7, 6-3 for his third consecutive tough three-set win Friday. He'll meet Ray Moore of South Africa, who downed Richard Russell 6-3, 6-2.

Crealy, the top seed, took Tom Edlefsen 6-4, 4-6, 6-3 in another tough match and Mayer downed Dick Bohrnstedt 6-4, 7-6.

Borowiak, who had service problems all day, also was upset in the doubles when he and Haroon Rahim, his former UCLA teammate from Bakistan, lost to Dick Dell of Maryland and Sherwood Stewart of Dallas, 6-4, 6-4. The Borowiak-Rahim combo was top-seeded.

In other doubles competition Friday, Edlefsen and Leonard beat Barry MacKay (of Ross) and Alex Olmedo, 6-3, 6-2.

The woman's singles also lost its top seed when Barbara Downs of Alamo had to withdraw because of a throat infection.

Marin Supply Wins On McBain's Homers

Buz McBain's second home run of the game, a two-run shot in the final inning, gave Marin Supply an 11-10 victory over Kentucky Fried Chicken last night in a San Rafael Recreation Department adult softball league game at Albert Field.

Fred Pheiffer hit a grand slam earlier for Marin Supply. In other games, Jim Schmidt drove in three runs with three hits, including a two-run homer, in MacArthur's 5-2 victory over Hobbit's Habit, and Escrow hit six straight singles in a six-run sixth inning en route to a 9-4 triumph over Les Elite.

WEEK IN BUSINESS

The Investor's Confidence Hit

Breakdown of talks between oil companies and the world's oil producing nations, and the boost to 6 per cent in the Federal Reserve's discount rate helped undermine investor confidence.

The popular Dow Jones industrial average fell 25.89 to 927.98 after climbing 31.68 the previous week. Standard & Poor's 500 stock index, wider market barometer, was off 2.83 for the week to 108.17. The NYSE index declined 1.34 to 57.43.

Losses were general throughout the list; losers outnumbered gainers, 1,188 to 583, among 1,974 issues traded.

Turnover dwindled to 68,787,053 shares from 81,851,372 the week before, and 71,942,040 a year earlier.

The technical rally of the previous week spilled over into the first two trading days, but market strength deteriorated Wednesday on news the Organization of Petroleum Countries' talks with western oil producers had broken down.

The prospect of extensive fuel rationing began to make itself felt on parts of the list, particularly the weakening airlines, and the oils themselves. Airline executives began talking about slower flying speeds in order to conserve increasingly tight fuel supplies.

Oil stocks also smarted from a report the Federal Trade Commission was stepping up its investigation of the industry's competitive practices, with an eye toward possible antitrust action. On the plus side, the Cost of Living Council said it might ease some of the pricing restrictions placed on oil products. Mobil Oil Chairman Rawleigh warner Jr., called such

Brokers called the jump Thursday in the Federal Reserve's discount rate "unpleasant" for the stock market. They laid much of the blame for Friday's sharp decline on that single happening. The rise in the interest rate charged the Federal Reserve's member banks was the fourth in a row, and brought the discount rate to its highest level since the so-called "credit crunch" of 1969-1970.

Newton Zinder of E.F. Hutton said the move by the Fed provoked whisperings of a repeat of the tight-money period three years ago. More immediately, it raised the prospect of a new increase beyond the present 7 per cent in the prime lending rate that banks offer their most favored customers.

American Airlines was the most active, off 3 ¼ to 14 ¾ on 843,300 shares. Suave Shoe was second, falling more than half—4 ⅝ to 4 ⅜—on 820,500 shares. The company reported sharply lower earnings for the current quarter. Mobil Oil followed, off 6 ¾ to 64 on 734,100 shares.

Southern California: Blighted Paradise

AFTER OUR LONG, wet, cold winter, an auto trip to Southern California and return is refreshing.

Wildflowers abound; hills are green even into early May. Some hillsides in Southern California which become green only once every few years are holding their color late this year, and some even boast carpets of wildflowers, a most rare occurrence.

Lupines are profuse. Mustard has not seemed so high nor so brilliant in years. Ceanothus abounds in three colors which probably are actually three shades of blue — near white, bluish gray, and blue-blue.

Flying insects also are more abundant than ever. An hour's driving at freeway speed will produce enough bug spots on your windshield to impair your view of the road ahead.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA auto traffic is as horrendous as ever. Almost any place within 50 miles of downtown Los Angeles is a nightmare at commute hour. Unless the weather is just right, smog is as bad as ever, or worse. In some places it is downright dangerous.

Riverside gets it worse than downtown Los Angeles because prevailing westerly winds blow the stuff from Los Angeles and Orange counties through a couple of gaps in the hills to Riverside.

In 1948, noxious coal fumes coagulated to suffocate 22 persons in Donora, Pa. Polluted "black fog" killed 4,703 in London in 1952.

Some smog experts fear that Riverside may be the site of the world's next great smog disaster.

THE U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has threatened gasoline rationing in the Los Angeles area as a means of bringing hydrocarbon emission under control.

The Los Angeles Rapid Transit District offers discount prices on monthly bus tickets and promotes use of the bus system in place of a second car. Some private companies and some city, state and federal offices are urging employees to pool rides to work.

Some years ago Los Angeles voters turned down a bond issue to build a rapid transit monorail system. There are indications that a ballot measure authorizing funds for rail transit would stand a much better chance of passage now.

A voluntary organization called Clean Air Constituency has suggested a "driving boycott" which would see voluntary elimination of non-essential automobile use.

Los Angeles metropolitan area now has a network of 800 miles of freeways, built at a cost of $3 billion. Another 750 miles are planned or proposed. But many may never be built. There is growing opposition as the feeling grows that freeways may not be the answer to Southern California's traffic problems.

WHEN THE WEATHER is just right and there is little or no smog, Southern California reminds you of what it was like a generation ago. The sun shines brightly. The blue sky is accented by fleecy white clouds. The San Gabriel mountains rise unbelievably high and close. Mid-day is hot but an afternoon sea breeze makes perfect shirt-sleeve weather. Evenings invite barbecuing and eating out of doors, in shirt sleeves. Yet the night is cool enough for sound sleeping.

It is well nigh perfect, a paradise.

Unfortunately, such weather lasts only a day or two. The overpowering smog is back; it is humid and irritating. The noise, heat and fumes of the traffic are overpowering.

In a sense, Southern California is a microcosm where man can see clearly what he has done to foul his own nest.

Somehow, we must reverse this process so that in the next generation skies will grow clearer and the air purer.

Recycling Ones Own Paper

Carl Jung, the founder of Jungian analysis, was quite poor in his youth. Even in his old age he remained quite thrifty. He received much mail as he became famous. The backs of the letters and envelopes he received became his note paper and memo pad.

In a sense, he was recycling paper. It's an old journalistic tradition to take notes on the back of envelopes, feeling that such informality put the interviewee more at ease. We find the backs of envelopes handy for shopping lists and reminders to ourself. It makes us more tolerant of our junk mail.

BRICKBATS to members of the San Rafael City Council for raising their own pay 5 per cent, retroactive to 1970. Retroactive pay raises constitute a questionable practice at best. One like this is a scandal, even though the amount involved is not large.

BOUQUETS to Marin County Supervisors Gary T. Giacomini and Michael Wornum for voting AGAINST creation of the county's conglomerate public health-mental health-coroner-public administrator-medical-welfare-probation department.

Child Care Session Seen As Important

Last Saturday, May 5, more than 100 people met at the College of Marin for Child Care Awareness Day. There were speakers on state and federal law changes which affect day care centers. There were also speaker-representatives from the County Child Care Planning and Advisory Committee and the Concerned Citizens for Child Care. The main speaker for the day was Willie Brown, chairman of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee. After hearing the speakers, the audience broke up into workshops on the single parent, CCCPAC, and parental stress, among others.

We were disappointed that the Independent-Journal did not send a press representative, despite an invitation. This day proved that child care has become an important issue in the county. . .

'Planning' Destroys Back Yard Privacy

Your feature article in the magazine section of the April 28 issue relative to homes fitting the natural contour of the land instead of the massive bulldoze approach of making the land fit the homes was great.

The need for this practical approach with consideration for the existing homes is vital, and articles like yours do a real service to the community.

The opposite of this theory, I regret to report, is a fact for all of us on the periphery of the Quail Hill development where, up to this point, the home owners and/or contractors are building big homes overlooking the existing one-story Eichlers which, as you know, are only 10-15 feet in height.

The new two-story home, a bare 10 feet behind our fence, has a series of windows, plus a decked porch, looking down into our entire back yard. The six trees planted as a barrier behind our fence, part of the overall plan approved prior to any building, have all been removed. Five of these three-year-old trees were replanted on the opposite side of the new home and the one lone tree that was left was mangled when the cement trucks laid in their steel troughs. This tree departed in the next load of trash.

The San Rafael Planning Department people have been sympathetic to our plight, but explain the plans for these homes were approved prior to April 5, a date that apparently signaled some new ground rules in construction, and there is nothing they can do for us at this time.

We never doubted that homes would be built on Quail Hill, and we further have no doubt there is nothing we can do except bring the situation to your attention in hopes it isn't repeated in the future.

This is planning?

Even male chauvinists have to admit that gals surpass guys in many types of endeavor — like motherhood.

That's what Mother's Day is all about.

On Mother's Day a man's place is in the home, messing up mom's kitchen in order to serve her breakfast in bed.

You never hear a bridegroom threatening to go home to father, do you?

Think of all the time Whistler's mother has been sitting in that rocking chair — waiting for Whistler's father to get home from the pub.

WASHINGTON — The reason why the Watergate case has broken open is that everyone involved is leaking to the press to save their own skins.

I work in a building on Pennsylvania Avenue which also includes the offices of the Boston Globe, Newsweek magazine, Newhouse Newspapers, the Dallas Times Herald, the Kansas City Star and the Chicago Tribune.

The other morning when I arrived there was a long line outside the building composed of people implicated in the Watergate affair. The line ran around the block.

A POLICEMAN stopped me at the door and said, "Get in the back of the line, Mac, like everybody else. Some of these people have been waiting all night to tell their stories to the press."

"I'm not a suspect in the Watergate case, officer, I'm a newspaperman going up to my office."

Some people in the line heard me and tried to shove documents at me.

"Let's have none of that," the cop said to the crowd. "You can show him your documents when you get inside."

ONE MAN, a former White House aide, shouted, "I can tell you the whole story on the Ellsberg break-in."

Another man said, "He doesn't know anything. I've got Ellsberg's psychiatrist's couch hidden in my home."

Someone down the line said, "Don't listen to him. I have a blockbuster of a story. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy wrote Clifford Irving's book about Howard Hughes."

Someone else yelled, "I have the names of everyone who contributed a million dollars to the Committee for the Re-Election of the President. Give me a break. I've been waiting since 6 o'clock last night to leak it."

"I'M SORRY," I said to the man, "but I don't write that kind of story. Why don't you leak it to Jack Anderson?"

"You can't get near his office," the man said. "I waited two days to leak it to him and I never got closer than a block away."

The police officer said to me, "I wish you wouldn't stand out here, sir. These people are desperate and I don't want a riot."

A man slipped me $5,000 in new $100 bills. "Take me upstairs with you to Newsweek's office and I'll give you another $5,000."

The offer was tempting, but I gave the man his money back. I said, "It would be unfair to the other suspects in line. I'm sure you'll all get in to leak your stories."

"That's what they told me at the Washington Post. But when I got up to the head of the line they said they didn't need any more on the Watergate bugging. They had enough leaks on that."

"I CAN'T UNDERSTAND why all you people are so desperate to talk to the press," I said to several of the people, all former White House aides.

"You dummy!" one of them shouted. "If we implicate others then we can get immunity from prosecution."

"Why should we be the scapegoats?" another man shouted. "We want to get the guys who put us up to this."

"If we get our stories in print," a third said, "then the public will know we were just little fish in a big stagnant pool."

"I'll go upstairs," I said.

The policeman opened the glass door and the crowd pushed forward, waving their incriminating evidence.

He shouted, "All right, you people stop shoving or I'll make you go to the back of the line."

PEKING — President Nixon's finest hour was when he came to Peking in February, 1972, to end 20 years of isolation from the world's most populous nation.

A spectacular performance on television, it was meant not as an end in itself but as the first step in a renewal of the close relationship that had once existed. In short, it was a new turn in the long love affair between the United States and China.

That is important to recall in light of the disaster to the Nixon administration. For the Chinese, in receiving the President and reversing the propaganda so long targeted on the wicked imperialist, put a far greater stake on the ultimate outcome than did the United States.

MY WIFE AND I had been in China for 36 hours before we learned of the President's dramatic appeal to the nation and the housecleaning of top officials. Then we got the news from a fellow American who had still been in Hong Kong when the story broke. Not a word in any Chinese newspaper or on the state radio; it was a striking commentary on the difference between the two social orders.

At the very top, to be sure, the full text of the President's address came by shortwave shortly after it was delivered. Excerpts from the address and a report of the events of that dramatic night were contained in a private semi-official letter going out to the cadres in the provincial capitals throughout the country. This would have a circulation of something more than five million. Add another several million with transistor radios capable of picking up short-wave broadcasts on BBC or the Voice of America, and the total would be perhaps one per cent of the 800 million Chinese.

For that one per cent the future of an administration in Washington with three and a half years still in office is supremely important. This not alone for the mutual benefits that can flow between the two countries, but for the peace of the entire world.

The Nixon-Kissinger structure of peace is three-cornered. China, the United States and the Soviet Union are in relationship of tension eased by common compromise. The American weight in this three-cornered structure is essential in view of the deep-seated hostility between the People's Republic and the Soviet Union. Without that weight the structure of peace would be jeopardized, if indeed it would not fall.

THE NIXON PROMISE of a generation of peace is in question. The credibility of the government in Washington is essential to carry through the great undertaking in foreign policy that was the achievement of the first four Nixon years. To lose this in a prolonged and venomous domestic quarrel would be the ultimate tragedy.

Fortunately, there is ongoing movement. The arrival of David K. E. Bruce, America's most distinguished diplomat, next week to open a liaison mission will mark the beginning of a new phase in the rebuilding of confidence between the two powers.

Peking, in turn, is sending its No. 1 diplomat, Huang Chang, until recently ambassador to France, to Washington. A delegation of Chinese journalists will shortly go to the United States. They will be accompanied by officials of the information division of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and presumably their impressions will be recorded in the carefully controlled official press.

Trade negotiations between Washington and Peking are very much to the fore. The visitor arriving in the immediate aftermath of the Watergate upheaval is invariably asked what effect it will have on American policy. Will the United States now go isolationist?

These questions are understandable in a country where the cultural revolution produced a trauma accentuated by the overthrow of Mao Tse-tung's heir apparent, Lin Piao, and the "unmasking" of the traitorous Liu Shao-chih. The Chinese have endured so much of shock and upheaval that they can hardly be surprised that disasters occur even in the seat of government of one of the superpowers.

Watergate Shows Weakness Of Concentration Of Power

The Watergate affair is having an interesting side effect on people whose business it is to think about better ways of organizing the machinery of government in Washington. Does the present "staff system" really work as well as the old "cabinet system"?

Richard Nixon is the first President to go all the way over to a full "staff system." True, a partial beginning toward it was made in the Eisenhower administration. And policymaking was centered in the White House to a considerable extent under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. But in all those three presidencies, much still remained of the old cabinet system. Cabinet officers like John Foster Dulles, Charles E. Wilson, George Humphrey, and Herbert Brownell were important policymakers for President Eisenhower. Dean Rusk, Douglas Dillon, and Robert McNamara were equally important under President Kennedy. Clark Clifford took over Defense late in the Johnson era and turned President Johnson's war policy right around. Policy often originated in cabinet offices.

HIGH POLICY in the Nixon administration originates only in the White House. Cabinet officers who thought otherwise — Walter Hickel, George Romney — have long since left. Nelson Rockefeller might have come into the second Nixon administration. He declined the opportunity. It is no path to an independent political career under the present staff system.

But how well is it working? It worked beautifully when everything was going smoothly for Mr. Nixon. Since he originated policy, and was seen to be the originator, he became the beneficiary. The State Department got none of the political advantage of the new China policy or the easing of relations between Washington and Moscow. It all went to President Nixon himself — through the channel of Henry Kissinger.

There is no reason why it shouldn't work to the entire satisfaction of the President so long as the policies shaped in the White House offices by his own staff assistants, advisers, and counselors turn out to be successful policies. But now they aren't all successful. Inflation is loose again, and Mr. Nixon can't divert himself of responsibility by firing a secretary of the treasury. Phase 3 was his own doing, by his own personal staff. He is stuck with the less-than-satisfactory state of his economic policies.

WATERGATE IS PROVIDING a classic example of the liabilities of the system. Wrongdoing is laid right at the door of White House offices. Messrs. Hunt and Liddy did their burgling and eavesdropping on White House orders and were paid, at least some of the time, from funds kept in White House safes.

Looking ahead, what happens if Mr. Nixon's foreign policies should falter? They are his policies. They cannot be repudiated by changing secretaries of state.

Could Mr. Nixon at this stage of things go back to a cabinet system? Could he attract back in his service men of independent stature like Walter Hickel or George Romney? Who with a political future in mind would want any cabinet post now? Mel Laird has just left the cabinet, and would not dream of taking a staff job.

ONE ARGUMENT for the staff system is that only the White House can override a cabinet officer of great political power in his own right. Another is that in these modern times a country as big and difficult to manage as the United States can only be governed by the single authority of a powerful White House. Otherwise, say some of the experts, there will be conflicting policies, confusion, and inefficiency.

But a cabinet officer whose policies fail can be changed without serious difficulty. It has always been done under the cabinet system. Nikita Khrushchev used the staff system and look what happened to him when his policies failed.

It seems to be a reasonable probability that the move to the staff system has gone too far and that the pendulum will swing back to some halfway point in the next administration. It would be extremely difficult for Mr. Nixon to go back now. But his sucessor, pondering the lessons of Watergate, will probably want less, not more, responsibility centered in the White House itself.

Skylab Is Envisioned As U.S. Bridge To The Future

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) — Take a three bedroom apartment and a multipurpose laboratory, put them inside a huge rocket fuel tank, add an observatory and provisions for three men for 20 weeks and you have America's soon - to - be - launched Skylab space station.

Skylab is by far the largest spaceship ever built. It is one of a kind, a $2.5 billion effort to build on 11 years of earth orbital and moonflight experience and put space technology to work for man on Earth.

The 168,578-pound assembly, fashioned out of a Saturn rocket stage, is set for launch into orbit around Earth at 10:30 a.m. (PST) Monday, to open America's fourth man-in-space project.

Skylab over the next eight months will house three crews of three men each. The first three astronauts will stay up a record 28 days and the next two crews each will occupy the orbiting lab 56 days, and possibly longer on the final mission.

The current space endurance record is held by three Soyuz 11 Soviet cosmonauts who died because of a hatch leak after nearly 24 days in orbit two years ago.

The two-level Skylab is much larger than the Salyut that the cosmonauts occupied, and the American lab is more like a ship than a spacecraft. It has three little bedrooms, a ward room complete with freezers, and food heaters, a bathroom, a well-equipped medical area and barn-like work areas.

Skylab will be launched with stores for 420 man days of spaceflight. There are more than 20,000 items on the inventory, including 2,100 pounds of canned, frozen and dried food, 1,200 aspirin, 199 T-shirts, four decks of playing cards, 150 rolls of teleprinter paper and 60 pounds of tools.

The food will be better than Americans have ever had in space. Included on the manu are such favorites as filet mignon, lobster Newburg, roast beef, spaghetti and even strawberries and ice cream.

Veteran moon pilot Charles (Pete) Conrad, 42, Dr. Josep P. Kerwin, 41-year-old physician, and Paul J. Weitz, 40, an aeronautical engineer, will visit Skylab first. They are scheduled to take off at 10 a.m. Tuesday a day after the lab is launched, and fly a modified Apollo command ship to a rendezvous and hookup with Skylab 7 hours and 40 minutes later.

The Apollo will serve as a ferry for Skylab. The commandship, almost identical to those that shuttled men to and from the moon, will remain docked to Skylab for 28 days. Then Conrad, Kerwin and Weitz will return to earth in the Apollo, leaving Skylab in orbit to be visited by the next crew two months later.

Alan L. Bean, who flew to the moon with Conrad on Apollo 12, will command the second Skylab mission, set to start Aug. 8. He will be accompanied by Dr. Owen K. Garriott, an electrical engineer, and Jack R. Lousma, an aeronautical engineer.

The third crew, to be launched Nov. 9 to spend 56 days in orbit, will be commanded by Gerald P. Carr, an aeronautical engineer who has not yet flown in space. His crewmen also are both rookies — Dr. Edward G. Gibson, a physicist, and William R. Pogue, who has a master's degree in mathematics.

Skylab will circle earth at five miles a second in a 270-mile high orbit canted 50 degrees to the Equator. That path will take it farther north and south, 3,450 miles in each direction, than any American manned spaceship and will come very close to the tracks followed by Soviet manned spaceships.

During its eight months of service, Skylab will crisscross every section of the United States and 75 per cent of the world's surface. The space station is so big, 118 feet long and 90 feet wide, that at sunrise and sunset it will resemble a large star streaking southeast or northeast.

The object of the Skylab project is to see if man can withstand the peculiarities of weightless space for long periods and to experiment with a broad variety of practical applications to see what he can do in orbit that he can't on Earth.

The nine Skylab astronauts will conduct a total of 89 experiments in such diverse fields as solar astronomy, earth resources surveying and materials processing as well as medicine.

"We believe that there is only one way to learn about man's capabilities in space, and that is to let him live and work in space on real tasks, on tasks that are of first importance to him and his colleagues back on Earth," said associate NASA administrator George M. Low.

"Skylab is a bridge to the future," said program director William C. Schneider.

It is the first step toward large, semi-permanent space stations that NASA expects someday will house dozens of scientists and engineers, perhaps of different nationalities, for months at a time. Such orbiting platforms will be serviced by winged shuttle ships, like ferry boats supply islands at sea.

The space planners envision such man-made islands in space to exploit the uniqueness of space for a wide variety of applications and eventually to serve as way stations for flights to the moon and planets.

Among the jobs foreseen now for space stations are manufacturing plants for goods that can't be made in earth's gravity - such as perfect ball bearings, foam steel and some vaccines. Planners also expect such manned oribiting platforms to serve as astronomical observatories, weather watching stations, research labs and the like.

But before such dreams can be made a reality, scientists must prove that man can live in weightless space for long periods without harmful physiological effects.

"I think it's important for us to realize that we have real questions about the limitations of man," said Dr. Charles A. Berry, NASA's chief of life sciences.

Berry has watched U.S. astronauts increase their exposure to the lack of gravity from five minutes to 14 days without serious difficulty and he personally doesn't agree with most of the doubts that have been raised in this country and abroad. But he said "We do have some serious questions and we need data to prove it."

Seventeen different medical experiments will be conducted aboard Skylab during the 20 weeks it is manned, to monitor its pilots and see how their bodies are affected by weightlessness. The space station is equipped as well as - or better than - a general practitioner's office on Earth and doctors on the ground will be able to watch the astronauts' condition daily.

There are two particularly important pieces of medical gear aboard Skylab. One is a cylindrical chamber that simulates the effects of gravity on the body's circulatory system by reducing the oxygen pressure on the lower part of the body. The effect is the same as it is on Earth when one suddenly stands after a period of rest.

The other is a bicycle exerciser and associated electronic equipment to measure a crewman's heart rate and oxygen consumption for a given amount of work. Kerwin said the bicycle will let doctors see how well men can work, peddling the stationary bike, after living in weightless space at different intervals.

"If he quits early, is it because his legs got too tired? That's a mechanical problem most likely because it's harder to ride a bike up there than it is on the ground," Kerwin said in an interview. "Or does he quit because he's exhausted, with a high heart rate and a high blood pressure? That's a different story. You really have to think about that."

Kerwin said his biggest concern was not the heart, but the loss of calcium that apparently occurs for some reason when the body is exposed to the lack of gravity. A similar loss of bone material is seen in patients on Earth who spend long periods in bed.

"I wonder about the bones," Kerwin said. "I cannot make a valid argument to myself why the bones should not continue losing calcium for quite a long period of time." Doctors fear that a steady calcium loss for many months would weaken bones to the extent that they might eventually break under strains they normally could withstand.

Besides proving that men can work safely in space for weeks and months at a time, the Skylab astronauts plan to see just what men in space can do that men on Earth cannot.

There are three general types of experiments aboard the orbiting lab. One set will use a battery of telescopes to study the sun. Another group will use different sensors to gaze at Earth and survey its natural resources and a third group will try out different ways to process materials in the unique weightless environment.

"There are many things that can be done from space to help everybody, besides just gaining knowledge," Conrad said. "Some day we should be routinely using space as we use the air today to fly airplanes and get people around and do various things."

Skylab's solar studies are primarily basic research, but they may even have a practical payoff. Some of the solar phenomena physicists are most interested in are the occasional great outbursts of radiation that affect Earth's weather, disrupt radio communications and sometimes even result in electromagnetic disturbances that cause power blackouts.

Other sensors aboard Skylab will be looking at the Earth, photographing selected regions across the United States and in other countries to tell scientists more about Earth's resources and to monitor changes to its delicate environment. Several hundred scientists will study Skylab's photographs to be helpful in the fields of agriculture, forestry, geology, hydrology, oceanography, geography, meteorology and ecology.

In addition to serving as an earth and solar observatory, Skylab will act as a factory in orbit. Its crewmen will use an electric furnace and a small vacuum chamber equipped with an electron beam welder to experiment with manufacturing processes in the weightless environment. Tests also will be made of welding and brazing techniques for later use in space repair and maintenance operations.

Nineteen high school students also will have experiments aboard Skylab, as a result of a national competition sponsored two years ago by NASA and the National Science Teachers' Association. The experiments will include the use of Skylab photographs to determine ways to predict imminent volcanic activity, a telescopic search for objects within the orbit of Mercury, and an experiment to see how spiders spin webs in weightlessness.

Behind The News

THE AUCTION WORLD

American Paintings Making Money Grade

By DIANA LOERCHER
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

NEW YORK — The room smelled of perfume and money. As the auctioneer's voice fired prices into the elegant crowd that jammed two rooms of Sotheby Parke Bernet no one moved, except to give a surreptitious signal to one of the bid spotters.

A head nodded imperceptibly, arms remained folded, a gold pen flicked the air like a serpent's tongue. The excitement was primitive: It could have been a bullfight, a horse race, or the coliseum.

The painting in question, "Little Joe with Cow" by the Japanese-American artist Yasuo Kuniyoshi, was sold for a record-breaking $220,000. Chief auctioneer John Marion, who is also the president of Sotheby, the nation's leading art auction house, commented in an interview later that he was afraid he had made a mistake and jumped the bid by $100,000. "Money was almost meaningless," he added. "I've never had that feeling before. It was a shock."

This particular Kuniyoshi was part of the Edith Halpert collection of early 20th Century American paintings auctioned off by SPB last month for an unprecedented grand total of an American painting sale of $3,670,675. The staggeringly high prices which the paintings brought were unanticipated even by SPB officialdom and broke a total of 17 previous records.

The Kuniyoshi garnered the highest price ever paid for a 20th Century American painting (surpassing the previous record of $75,000 for a Roy Lichtenstein) and also for a 20th Century work of art (compared with the $80,000 for a David Smith sculpture). Stuart Davis's "Hot Still Scape for Six Colors" broke the same records, though not by so wide a margin.

Georgia O'Keefe's "Poppies" went for $120,000 and scored a new record for a living American artist, and Elie Nadeleman's primitive wood sculpture, "Tango: A Pair of Figures," sold for $130,000, breaking the previous American sculpture record by $5,000. New records for individual painters, such as Ben Shahn and Lyonel Feininger, were also set.

The implications of the phenomenal success of this auction have reverberated throughout the art world. First of all, it provided an index, dramatic to the point of disbelief, or how art prices continue to catapult. There were those who protested privately after the auction the "excessiveness' and "absurdity" of the prices. But as Marion remarked, "The value of a work is what it's sold for." Evidently inspired by such hard economic truths, the Wall Street Journal even published an article evaluating art as the new international currency and investment.

Secondly, the sale underscored the influence of the art auction on prices. Since Parke-Bernet Galleries was acquired by the powerful British auction house, Sotheby's, in 1964, its sales have tripled and almost everything it touches turns to gold, in a financial sense at least. Marion reported in January of this year that net sales were up by almost $8.5 million since the beginning of the season (last September), a rise of more than 50 per cent.

There are several reasons why the art auction has become so popular. Essentially, it offers the opportunity for a rapid, virtually reliable, and highly competitive sale. It also obviates the complications that frequently arise during private transactions between dealers and collectors.

Marion compared the art auction to the stock market. "If you open the New York Times and read through the list of several thousand boring companies, how do you really find people who are interested in buying all these? Well, at least there they have numbers to go on, but that's the charm of the stock market. The stock market is, after all, an auction sale that takes place every day for — whatever it is — six hours. Well, an art sale here is the same thing. This is the stock market for the art world."

The astronomical prices that the paintings commanded at the Halpert auction are attributable to several factors, according to James Maroney, head of SPB's American painting department. Maroney cited Mrs. Halpert's reputation as a sponsor of early 20th Century American art; the unstable monetary situation which is causing more people to invest in art; and the mounting collector interest in American art.

Another major consideration is the expansion of the international market, especially in Japan. Three Japanese dealers bought 16 paintings for $632,000 at the Halpert auction, including nine of the 11 Kuniyoshi's and four Shahn's. There were obvious ethnic reasons for their interest in the Kuniyoshi's, but this does not belie the "Japanese art invasion," as Sotheby terms it. One theory is that the country's pervasive westernization has inevitably spilled over into the art sphere. Another more concrete explanation is that affluent Japanese are eagerly looking for a stable investment as a safeguard against inflation.

Until recently, Japanese buyers have concentrated on Impressionist and modern paintings and especially Oriental art which is enjoying an extraordinary vogue in international art circles these days. The Halpert auction was significant in that it marked the first major Japanese foray into American art, and their enthusiasm indicated that we need not look beyond our own shores for the next collecting trend.

Finally, not to be discounted in the analysis of any auction is the nature of auctions themselves. "Auction fever" is not a myth; it exists and causes bidders to behave like gamblers — to take chances they didn't plan to take, to pay more than they can afford, to mutter at the end, "What did I do?" It prompts a husband to ask his wife, about a painting running into the tens of thousands, "Do you want it?" and a man to say to his friends at the exit, "Did you get anything?" There seems to be an association of money with power that intoxicates and drives the bidding higher and higher.

This Week In The World

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

For the first time since the Teapot Dome scandal 50 years ago, former Cabinet officers have been indicted by a federal grand jury.

Former Attorney General John Mitchell and Former Secretary of Commerce Maurice Stans were indicted on charges of perjury and obstructing justice. The grand jury indictment said they tried to block an investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission into financier Robert L. Vesco's dealings.

Vesco, former chairman of International Controls Corp., and 41 others have been accused in a civil suit filed by the SEC of milking foreign mutual funds of $244 million.

Mitchell and Stans, the indictment said, "by deceit, craft, trickery and means that are dishonest" tried to obstruct the investigation in exchange for a $200,000 contribution from Vesco to President Nixon's reelection campaign.

Food Buying Guide Designed For Schools

WASHINGTON (UPI) — After two years of preparation and testing, the Agriculture Department yesterday announced it is offering teachers a new set of lesson guides designed to train both high school students and adults in how to buy better food for less money.

Complete with aids including charts, refresher tests and even a pair of crossword puzzles, the new teaching guide is broken down into lessons on meat, dairy products, eggs, poultry, fresh fruits and vegetables, canned and frozen fruits and vegetables, and a final section on how to get more for your money.

The course material includes such practical guides as a pair of charts on the comparative cost of chicken or turkey parts when whole birds are selling at various prices.

Officials of the Agriculture Marketing Service (AMS), who prepared the lesson plans after having versions of the program pre-tested by a number of state educational agencies, said the guides would help teachers make coordinated use of a wide range of "how to buy" materials produced by the agency earlier. These include posters, slide sets, movies and a long list of pamphlets including one entitled "Money-Saving Main Dishes."

Many of the materials are available in both English and Spanish.

Teachers would also be urged to:

Compare the price perserving of various forms of the same food such as fresh, frozen and canned green beans.

Have students compare prices between different styles and brands of the same product, an exercise which can "make (them) aware of how simple it is to get the same product less expensively by comparative shopping both for brands and styles."

Officials said single copies of the loose-leaf lesson plans, titled "How to Buy Food — Lesson Aids for Teachers," will be sent free to teachers on request from the Office of Communication, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Policy On Pier To Be Studied

The Sausalito City Council, meeting at 8 p.m. Tuesday at city hall, will consider an arrangement allowing the Napa Street pier to remain over city property in exchange for a fee.

Attorney Leonard Rappa has criticized such an arrangement, calling it improper to allow the pier to continue encroaching on the city's Napa Street right-of-way, which lies underwater at that location.

The council also will consider the wording of a statement to be issued assuring voters that a scheduled $556,000 bond issue June 12 to buy Central School and a library site will not raise property taxes.

Profile Of A Marinite

"I have always had this keen feeling that if the law is to mean anything in a society, it has to mean something to the small man on the street," believes Marin County Public Defender Harold J. Truett.

AS PUBLIC DEFENDER for the County of Marin, Harold J. Truett heads a staff of 10 lawyers who represent the poor and see to it that they get the day in court to which all Americans are entitled. He regards the law as "a tool that should help everyone," and performs his duties with dedication.

By LARRY MOWELL

Harold J. Truett's role as Marin County public defender meshes well with his view that the law is a tool that should help everyone, "not a weapon for domination over those people who cannot afford to hire a lawyer."

After his graduation from Hastings College of the Law in San Francisco in 1950, Truett joined his father-in-law's law firm, which specialized in patents, trademarks and copyrights.

That didn't last long. Now 50 and the head of 10 lawyers who represent those too poor to hire an attorney, Truett looks back on his first two years in practice as "extremely dull."

"I just wasn't mechanically inclined and I just felt my aptitudes in the law were more in dealing with the social problems than the corporate and engineering problems," Truett said.

So, in 1953, he set out to apply his philosophy of the law and associated himself with the late Jerome Duffy in a San Rafael practice, a step which tied him closer and closer to defense of the indigent until his formal appointment as public defender in 1970.

"BASICALLY I have always had an interest in the work itself. I have always had this keen feeling that if the law is to mean anything in a society, it has to mean something to the small man on the street," he told the Independent-Journal.

The fellow who purchases an insurance policy or a car needs a lawyer as much as the company he buys from, but he usually can't afford the legal help, Truett said.

"The law basically is a social tool and it should be used to assist all people in society so as to make this a better coordinated society," he said. The law should prevent rights from being trampled, according to Truett.

HAROLD TRUETT'S championing of the poor began in the late 1950s when he was referral officer for the then privately funded Legal Aid Society, established by the Marin County Bar Association.

From 1959 to 1964, he did part-time public defense work when Peter Allen Smith, now a municipal court judge, and Jerome C. Durham, Truett's predecessor, did most of the public defender chore.

However, a 1964 supreme court decision made Truett, "in effect, the misdemeanor public defender." The court extended the right to an attorney to misdemeanor cases, but the county counsel said statutes forbade the official public defender to handle such cases.

THE UPSHOT was that the county contracted with Truett and Robert I. Conn to handle the misdemeanors and keep the files with the public defender cases in the firm of Buresh, Smith, Truett and Durham, Truett said.

When Smith was appointed judge, Durham became public defender and Truett his assistant. But what had been a part-time job soon became "fulltime plus" because the case load expanded dramatically "with the advent of the discovery of marijuana and the drug or dope culture," and with the continuing population boom in Marin, Truett said.

The increase in heroin usage with its accompanying explosion in burglaries and thefts has kept the public defender caseload high, he said. Truett now oversees nine other attorneys and a budget of $330,000 a year.

BUT, DESPITE his feelings for the poor, Truett's legal career would have been much different had he succeeded in his two races for elected offices.

In 1958 he ran for district attorney against William O. Weissich when other candidates for public office were trying to "get rid of the old crowd." Truett said, "I just kind of got on the bandwagon with everybody else."

He lost; and he lost again in 1970 when he fell back into the pack in a large field of candidates for municipal court judge.

His public life extended beyond the law in the years between the elections. He was on the Marin County Democratic Central Committee from 1959 to 1963, on the Marin County Human Rights Commission in 1964 and 1965, and served on the board of Catholic Social Services of Marin County.

BOATING HAS since replaced those activities. Truett races his 24-foot sloop in events sponsored by the San Francisco Yacht Racing Association and teaches classes on boating and seamanship for the Marin Power Squadron.

Socially, he has been a member of the Kiwanis Club and a past grand knight of the Knights of Columbus, as well as president of the San Anselmo Little League.

"The law basically is a tool and it should be used to assist all people in society . . ."

Truett now lives in Novato with his wife, the former Lois L. Mellin. The couple's son, Harold III, 27, is studying law at the University of San Francisco. Their two daughters, Michele and Denise, are studying nursing in San Francisco.

TRUETT WAS born in San Francisco to a Marin family, but his father died when he was 1-year-old. He lived the rest of his pre-adult years with his grandparents in San Francisco, but spent all his holidays in Lagunitas where the family had a cabin.

Enrolled at the University of Santa Clara, Truett joined the Army Reserved Officers Training Corps and was called up in 1943 during his junior year for duty in Italy. "I got over there just as hostilities terminated," he said.

Although trained as a forward observer for the artillery of the 88th Infantry Division, his war experience was with peace-keeping forces in Gorizia along the Italian-Yugoslavian border.

THE WAR HAD stopped, but peace was not much safer. Huge peace demonstrations on each side of the border were marred by explosions, deaths and "a number of armed engagements," Truett said.

Freed from the Army in 1946, Truett returned to Santa Clara to complete his undergraduate studies, then went to Hastings, graduating in 1950.

Then, after working for his father-in-law, Truett started his dedicated effort to give legal aid to those who can't afford to pay.

The Romantic Song Still Has Its Champion

Marin's John Van Jandel Composes From The Heart

By DON KEOWN

IN THE RELAXING atmosphere of the patio at his Fairfax home, composer John Van Jandel works upon the score and lyrics of another song. In the foreground is the cut-in-Sweden album, "Days of Extension," made up entirely of his music, as performed by the European artists, Nannie Porres and Hayati Kafe. It is Van Jandel's first recording since coming to this country from Sweden in 1973 where he was once Europe's most famous bass viol player.

Is there still an audience in these cynical times for songs with titles like "Everytime I Saw You," "Somewhere, Someday, Somehow," "Rainbow Island" and "Love Me"?

Fairfax composer John Van Jandel hopes so, for he has a record album full of them, all his own compositions.

And he believes so, too, feeling that there is a nostalgic longing among many Americans for the old romantic songs.

"Anyway," he says, "I am a romantic at heart, and I couldn't write music or lyrics in any other way."

Van Jandel returned to his native Sweden to cut the album. Miss Porres is one of Sweden's best-known female singers of contemporary music. Hayati Kafe is Turkish born, but has been living and working in Sweden since 1962.

Despite the Scandinavian origins of the album, and the European nationalities of the vocalists, the Van Jandel lyrics are sung in English. Still, the composer feels, his own residence of more than 25 years in this country notwithstanding, there is a European feeling to his work that may help it to catch on with U.S. listeners who often show a preference for foreign-flavored songs and tunes.

"DAYS OF Extension" is not the first time Van Jandel has heard his own music on a recording. But it is his first record since he left his native Sweden in 1957.

The dozen songs on "Days of Extension" all represent compositions done over the span of more than a quarter century that he has been in America. All are the creative products, too, of a rich musical background that began in boyhood.

Van Jandel was born in the small Swedish city of Karlskrona, the son of parents who were both musical, although neither professionals. His father played cornet, his mother the guitar.

AT AGE 7 he began playing the violin, and soon was something of a child prodigy. At 12, he also began studying piano, although violin remained his principal instrument. And at that age he began taking lessons from Otterino Frati, a well-known Italian conductor who was in Sweden to perform at the Swedish Opera and in Stockholm's Grand Hotel.

At 16 he was playing under the Frati baton in the Grand Hotel, then Stockholm's biggest luxury hotel with its famed winter garden.

He had also made the irreversible decision that music was to be his future and had entered the Royal Swedish Academy of Music in Stockholm, where he was to study off and on for the next eight years, mastering composition, conducting, harmonics and musical history along with advancing his instrumental virtuosity.

A MAJOR decision was a shift in instrument — from violin to the string bass or bass viol.

"Everyone seemed to be playing the violin," he explains. "I thought I would be better off in a less crowded field."

So he began studying the string bass with Prof. Knut Guldbrandsson of the academy's prestigious faculty.

His long experience with the violin proved most helpful in learning the new instrument, Van Jandel says. And yet, he adds, a comparison of the two instruments as to difficulty is impossible — "they are just two different things."

OVER THE next 25 years Van Jandel was to enjoy a busy and successful career in Sweden as a professional musician, playing the classics — "to which I was always strongly oriented" —, popular music and jazz, and doing a considerable amount of composing.

One of his songs with a title that translates roughly into English as "I Would Like to Know More About Love," enjoyed a considerable popularity on a recording in Sweden.

"I had other music on records," he says, "but no real big hits."

He played and traveled Europe with such bands and groups as those of Peter Kreuder, Arne Hulphers, Svend Assmussen and Hakan von Eichwald.

"I PLAYED IN every European country except Spain and Portugal," he says.

Stockholm was then a haven and principal visiting point for American jazz artists. Van Jandel had the opportunity to sit in and play with the likes of Louis Armstrong, Coleman Hawkins and Joe Venuti.

"I did't find the transition to jazz at all difficult," he says. "Scandinavians have a special affinity and liking for jazz."

With Europa Film, Sandrews Film Atelier and the Swedish film industry, he wrote songs and theme music for motion pictures including the work of such filmmakers as Ingmar Bergman and Alf Kjelin.

HE LED HIS own musical group.

There were concert stage appearances, too. Complete programs of bass violin and piano are rare, but Van Jandel performed them, with Hindemith's concerto the highlight of his performance.

"I am a romantic at heart and I couldn't write music or lyrics in any other way," says John Van Jandel, who feels there is still an audience for the old-fashioned love songs.

He was deeply involved in Swedish broadcasting, but had become uncomfortable with the policies of those running the medium. Then, too, he had met a blonde Swedish girl, Gunvor, and had fallen in love with her with all his romantic soul.

THEY WERE married, and they decided 1957 would be a good time for a new beginning in a new country.

Both had three children by earlier marriages. And with the six youngsters, they pulled up stakes and headed for America.

"That was quite a thing," Van Jandel laughs today, "making a new beginning, with the responsibility for a new wife and six children."

They headed first for Houston, Tex., where they had friends. Those friends got Van Jandel involved with the musicians there, and soon he was traveling with the Henry King

IN SWEDEN, John Van Jandel began playing the violin at age 7, and was soon regarded as a child prodigy. By the time he was 16, he was playing with the orchestra at Stockholm's luxurious Grand Hotel, right, and a few years later made the shift from the violin to the bass viol as his principal instrument.

"After that, I did a lot of things," Van Jandel says. They remained in Houston two years, then decided to move on to California, "where we had other friends."

On the West Coast, Van Jandel tried a number of jobs outside of music. Work in a San Francisco restaurant led him to open his own restaurant, specializing in Scandinavian dishes, on San Rafael's Fourth Street, "but I didn't have enough money to keep it going."

Through all these years, Van Jandel continued with his music. But the bass viol was put aside more and more in favor of composing. And eventually the big instrument was given to one of his sons, Ola, now 30 and long out on his own.

OF THE CHILDREN, only the oldest son went into music briefly on a serious basis. But he has since given it up and now lives with his wife and two children in Sweden where he works for National Cash Register.

Whenever John Van Jandel feels a yearning now to make music on an instrument, he picks up the violin, his stringed bass no longer being on hand. It was on the violin that he auditioned for the earned membership in the San Francisco Musicians' Union. He is a member, too, of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP), and was elected to membership in the Songwriters Hall of Fame.

He has been back to his native Sweden twice — once when his mother died, the second time for the cutting of the "Days of Extension" album.

FOR THE MAKING of the album, he borrowed broadcasting studio facilities in Stockholm, using his old contacts there. And he conducted the studio musicians who back up the two vocalists.

Nannie Porres is Stockholm-born. She began singing at age 15 in the Nalen, one of Stockholm's largest dancing halls. During the 1950s and 1960s she traveled extensively with prominent Swedish orchestras. And she has been seen often on television and in Swedish and Italian movies.

She was featured at the 1972 Altus Music Festival in Finland along with such stars as American saxophonist Dexter Gordon and Sweden's Ake (the Count) Persson.

Turkish-born Hayati Kafe worked with the Carl-Henrick Norins and Kenneth Staags orchestras after coming to Sweden in 1962. He sings now in supper club shows and on the concert stage, and appears on television and radio in Sweden, Norway and Germany.

HE HAS BEEN making records since 1965, and in 1968 collaborated with America's Bobby Darin in making "Things" that proved a hit.

The album bears a color photograph of the two vocalists, and Van Jandel's own label — Dellja Publishing, Box 14, Fairfax, Calif., 94930.

Several hundred of the albums have been cut and are stored in a Southern California warehouse awaiting what Van Jandel hopes will be a brisk demand for the records that will justify the production of still more of the discs.

EVENTUALLY, Van Jandel will try the European market. But America comes first.

Already the album has been heard locally on San Rafael's radio KTIM. And national exposure is scheduled.

Van Jandel describes it as "a rather moody and romantic kind of music — the kind that just seems to come out of me."

He admits: "I don't go for rock very much myself."

And he regrets, particularly, the replacement in so much of today's contemporary music of his beloved string bass by the bass guitar. "To me, it isn't the same."

BUT, HE ADDS, some of the string bass players performing in America today, particularly with jazz groups, "are very, very good."

Van Jandel is already beginning the composing of new songs for another album. "But it is a long, long job," he says.

A stout, genial and handsome man, at 61 he enjoys good health. His Swedish accent is still very much present and pleasant to the ears as he talks about his composing, which he sometimes works at in his garden.

"It is something you can't hurry," he says. "Sometimes an idea will come to you out of the clear, blue sky, in a flash. And you must jot it down immediately — then await the next flash."

AND WHICH of his many compositions is his personal favorite?

He considers the question for a minute, then replies: "I guess I like the one I called "I Found My Happiness' best because that pretty much tells the story of my life."

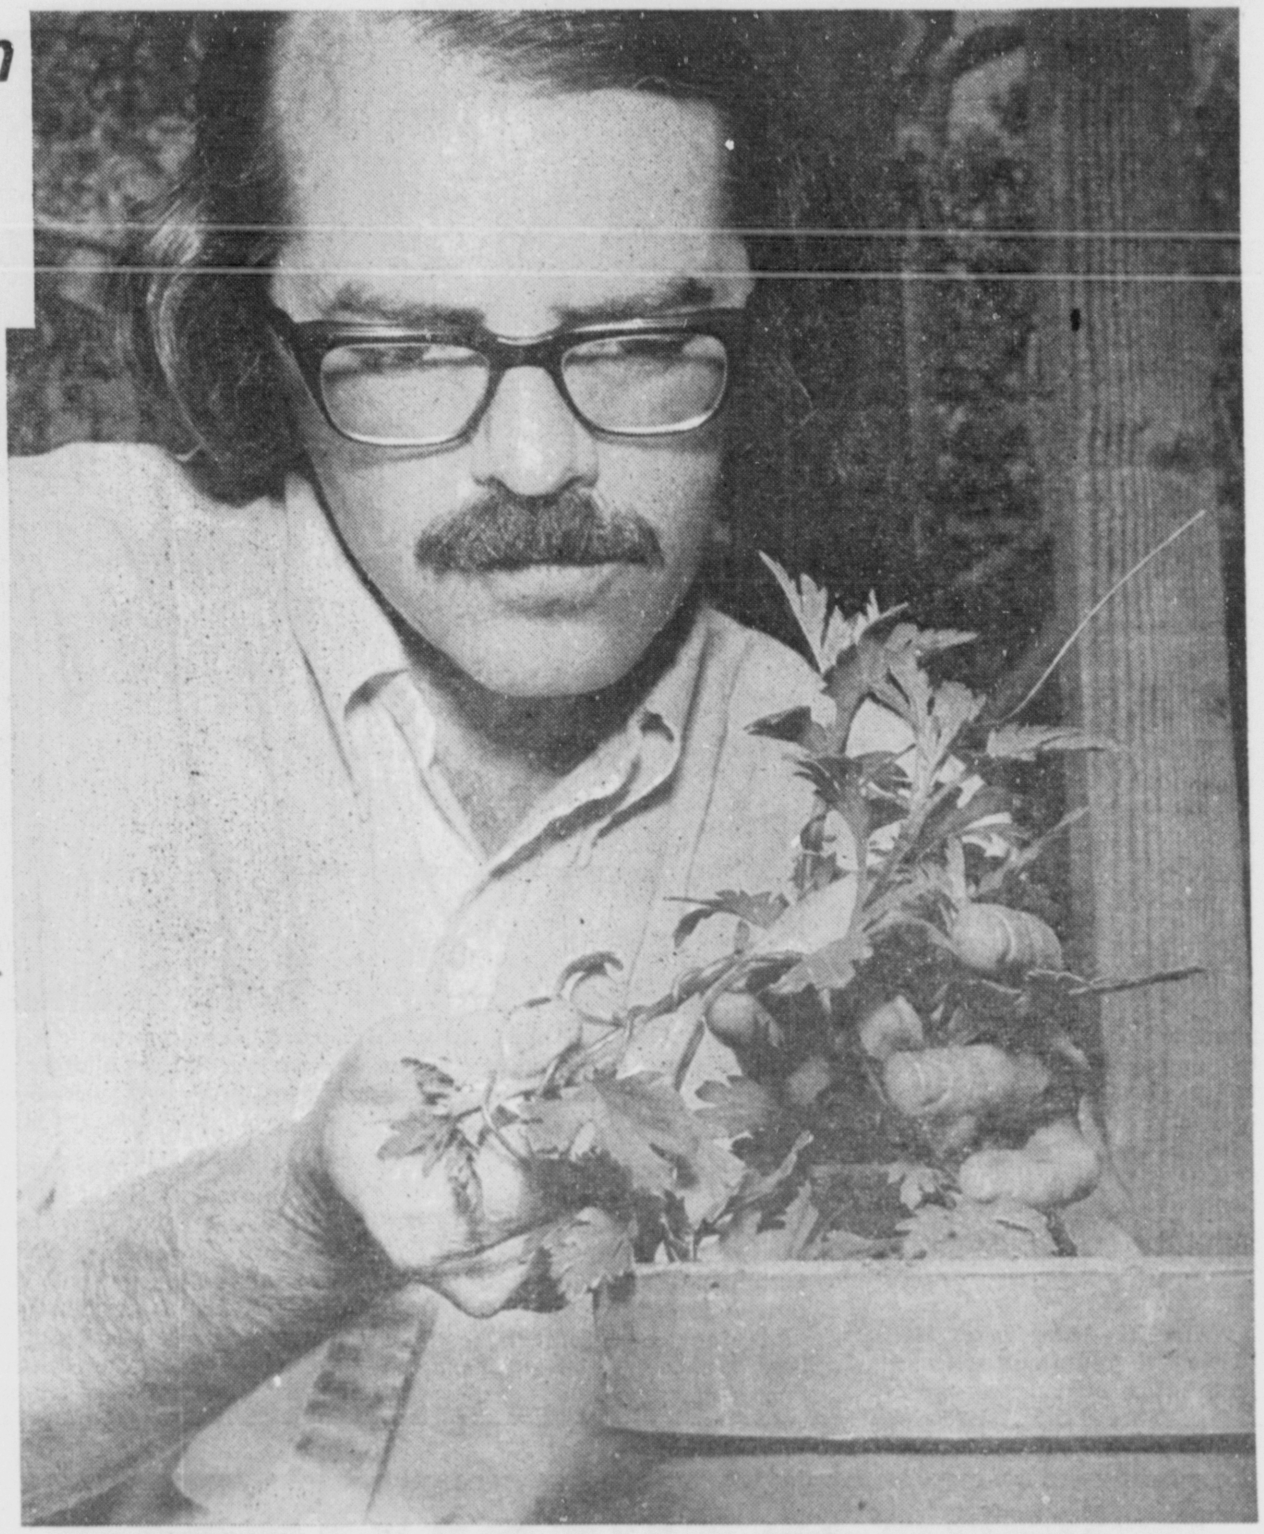
By PEG KEENER



WIRE IS USED by Dave Wahler of Mill Valley in the early forming of what will become a cascade-form bonsai chrysanthemum. Once the trunk line of the plant is shaped, the wire will be removed. It is vital, hobbyist Wahler says, that the training be in harmony with, not contrary to, the cultivar's normal growth pattern.

Bonsai enthusiasts are not all that unusual in Marin County. Neither are chrysanthemum growers.

But "green thumbers" who combine the ancient art of bonsai with the cultivation of the 'mum are relatively few in number.

Still they exist. And they are growing numerically.

One member of these select ranks is David Wahler of Mill Valley, current president of the Chrysanthemum Society of Marin and now in his fourth year as a specialist in the creation of dwarfed chrysanthemums.

A NATIVE Californian, born in Whittier, Wahler has had a long acquaintance with the 'mum. It began as a boy in Southern California where he heped his parents grow 'mums by the hundreds in their garden as cut flowers.

It was after moving to Northern California in 1967, and settling with his wife and children in a comfortable old Mill Valley home, that Wahler began developing his own expertise in growing iris and chrysanthemums of the garden variety.

Marin, he found, has the ideal climate for the 'mum. And the plant is easily, inexpensively grown, blooming the first year, and giving continuing stock.

A SUN-LOVER, the chrysanthemum can be grown in pots as well as in the ground, and provides fine cut flowers in the autumn, long after most plants have finished blooming.

Wahler says the development of his interest in bonsai 'mums was a natural outgrowth of his interest in the standard-size plants, and of his profession as a designer of buildings, commercial interiors and furniture.

"The growing became a creative challenge," he says, "and in bonsai, I found an especially reqarding, creative experience."

NOW HE SAYS:"After three full years of bonsai, I find I am gradually getting to really know the cultivar that I am working with. A close affinity develops between the grower and the plant.

Wahler defines bonsai as "the art of developing a miniature tree that resembles a tree as found in nature — definitely not a distorted, twisted plant that is unnatural."

THE WIRING and pruning that determine the plant's growth pattern should be supportive of the natural habits of the cultivar, not in conflict with them, he adds.

"Much to my surpirse," he says, "I have found that each of the 12 to 15 different chrysanthemum cultivars grown has subtle differences from all the others in the growth patterns that determine its final form."

There is one distinction between the chrysanthemum bonsai and other bonsais — the grower has no chrysanthemum tree to use as a model. "So we direct the chrysanthemum toward a resemblance of other tree forms, principally the conifers," Wahler says. "And it is important that the correct cultivar be selected for the specific plant form, to avoid undue forcing and distorting."

WAHLER GOT his initial guidance in 'mum bonsai from other growers, and from the book, "The Art of the Chrysanthemum," written by Tameji Nakajima in collaboration with H. Carl Young. "Without that help I would have been lost," he confesses.

Since that first invaluable instruction, the plants themselves have become Wahler's principal teachers.

"We even have a little conversation now and then," he laughs, "so that the plant has a definite say in determining what it is going to grow up to be."

THAT GROWING process for the chrysanthemum bonsai begins from December to February with the rooting of cuttings from parent plants. By the end of March or April, the original cuttings can be transferred from the cutting bench to a four-inch pot. New shoots will have started at the base of the plant. It is one of these new shoots that willbe selected as the final plant for bonsai development, with the original cutting gradually trimmed back to the base.

The new shoot is used, Wahler explains, because it combines the advantages of the heavy root system of the original cutting with the extreme flexibility of young trunk and stem growth.

At the right stage, this plant is transferred from the four-inch pot to a six-inch claypot. During the transplanting, the roots are examined carefully, trimmed and laid out in a radial manner around the base of the plant, removing smaller and distorted roots.

THIS IS repeated several times during the growing season, always taking great care to preserve the large roots and to form them in harmony with the projected final plant form. "The roots become a significant part of the composition of the completed, full plant," Wahler explains.

Training of the plant itself begins when the new shoot is approximately an inch high. Initial main stem training will be done either with bamboo stakes or wire, depending upon whether the final form is to be formal upright, cascade, semi-cascade, multiple trunk, or any of the other identifiable bonsai forms.

Often the pots will be set on their side, or even turned upside down over two separated supports so that the early form-

Bonsai 'Mums' Are His Specialty

AFTER THE form of the main stem is established basically, the plant is transferred to a six-inch plastic pot for the remainder of the growing season. And some six weeks before showtime, the final potting takes place, into a bonsai-type pot properly scaled to the plant.

At this point, the plant often is mounted on stone, lava rock and driftwood, with ground or powdered live moss added to the surface to give the finished pot a pleasing appearance of antiquity.

The bonsai 'mum differs from standard chrysanthemums in that it is fed and watered less often to reduce the size of the leaves. The plants, however, are kept in full sun.

WAHLER ALSO notes that chrysanthemum cultivars selected for bonsai treatment have characteristics that differ from the other garden or large show plants. These include a short growing habit, small leaf and bloom size (one-half to three-quarters of an inch in diameter), close internodes, good branching, and abundant fluorescence.

"The growing of bonsai chrysanthemums is definitely a creative art form," Wahler says. "After a busy day at my job, I find time spent with my bonsais is like a walk through the woods — a spiritual experience, full of wonder and discovery as you assist a plant through all the stages of growth from a cutting to a fully developed plant in bloom."

In a year's growth, a bonsai 'mum can pass through the stages of several years of regular culture.

THESE PLANTS can continue from year to year, and some continue their growth up to 10 and 12 years. But there is a gradual decrease in fluorescence, so that most specialists prefer to start anew each year with new plants and new objectives.

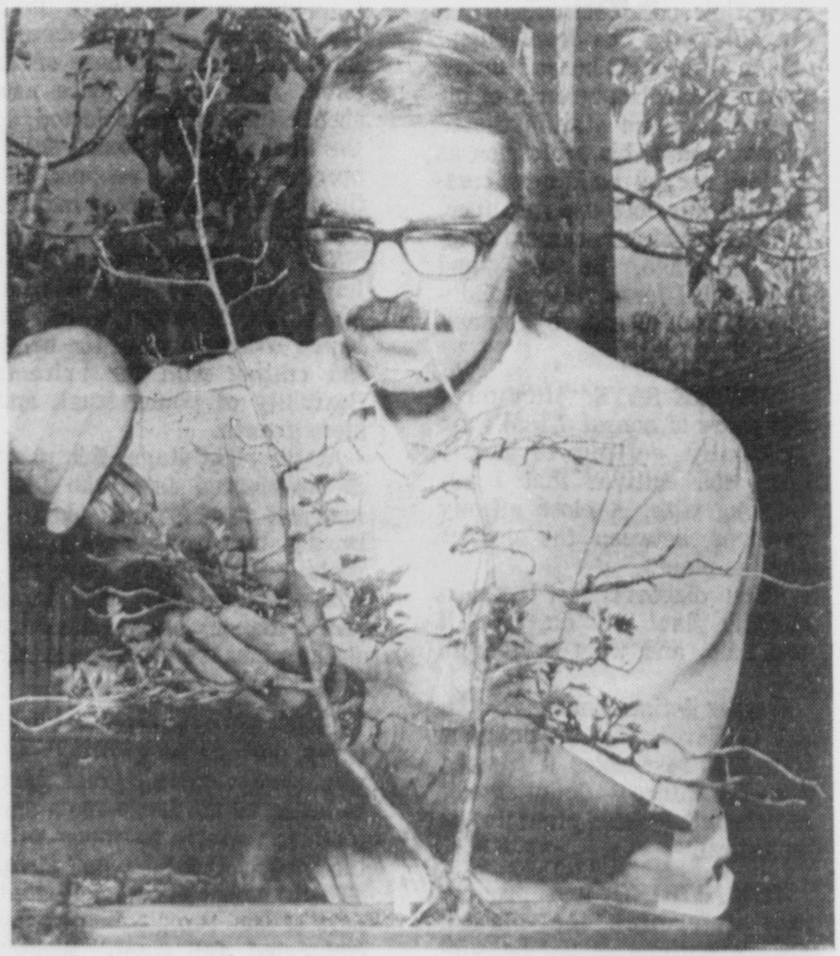
But one of his favorite events is not a show at all — but a sale, sponsored by the Marin Chrysanthemum Society he heads. He has been busy preparing rooted cuttings of bonsai cultivars for the society's annual plant sale, to be conducted next Saturday at the Montecito Shopping Center, in front of the Crocker National Bank, San Rafael, from 9 a.m. "until the plants are all sold out" — usually by mid-afternoon.

WAHLER'S enjoyment of the sale comes from the knowledge that he is introducing other Marinites and Northern Californians to the pleasures of 'mum bonsai that has given him such satisfaction.



THIS IS A second-year bonsai chrysanthemum, and David Wahler is pruning and trimming, just as one might do with a full-size plant. Many 'mum bonsai enthusiasts, however, prefer to start afresh each year with new cultivars. Wahler will be offering bonsai cultivars for sale at next Saturday's Chrysanthemum Society of Marin annual plant sale at San Rafael's Montecito Shopping Center.

75 Years Of The Red Cross

By NANCY HAYDEN

This month marks the 75th anniversary of the Red Cross in Marin County.

It is a history that reaches back to an era when the first Red Cross Societies were being organized in California, and when Marin was still comprised of towns and villages strung out like beads on a thread along the railroad.

The luxurious Hotel Rafael in San Rafael boasted it was only 50 minutes by ferry and train from San Francisco. Mrs. Louis Sloss, who was to become one of the founders of the local Red Cross, and her husband moved from their home in San Rafael to join their friends Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Hecht, future Red Crossers who "summered" at the impressive hotel.

The private racetracks that once had been a part of the large ranches, such as the Shafters of The Oaks at Olema, were gone, but F. William McKinnon, superintendent at St. Vincent's School for Boys, maintained a stable there. He sold many of his horses to raise money for the school and raced others. His most famous racehorse, Abomination, was exhibited at county fairs from Sacramento to San Jose.

In January of 1898, Marin residents discussed newspaper reports that the battleship Maine had been ordered to Havana to protect American life and property if the Cuban insurgents continued to riot against their Spanish overlords.

At her San Rafael home, Mrs. W. B. Bradford admired the little cupid on the card sent by her husband, a descendent of the first governor of Plymouth. Bradford was in Alaska as a part of his duties as first secretary of the Alaska Packers Association. Pauline Bradford appreciated his taking the time to send the sentimental token honoring the patron of love.

Louisianna Foster light heartedly celebrated Valentine's Day by having friends to a tea at Fairhills. Her home was rapidly gaining a reputation as a center for entertaining because of the graciousness of its Southernborn hostess.

THE DAINTY Mrs. A. W. Foster was the daughter of Dr. William A. Scott, who founded the San Francisco Theological Seminary. Her husband eventually became interested in her father's work and gave the seminary the land in San Anselmo where it now stands.

The fact that Dr. Scott had been hung in effigy during the Civil War because of his Southern sympathies was never mentioned at the Fairhills gatherings.

At 9:40 p.m., on Feb. 15, 1898, the battleship Maine was blown up in Havana Harbor, and the United States set upon a course which was to cuminate in war with Spain.

Miss F. Rea, daughter of the retired Mill Valley minister, read of the incident in a story written by George Bronson Rea in Harper's weekly.

CORRESPONDENT Rea wrote, "Thirty minutes after taps — at 10 minutes after nine o'clock, on Feb. 14, 1898, the serenity of the night of Havana Harbor was shattered."

Miss Rea's namesake reported on how a few twisted sections of the mainmast and tangled segments of superstructure were all that showed above the surface of Havana Harbor to reveal the Maine's burial place. Of the 350 men and officers who had sailed into Havana a few short weeks before, only 90 were alive. The public and the press, in sympathy with Cuba's revolution, became more and more insistent upon war with Spain.

Marin Superior Court Judge Frank Angellotti discussed the coming war with his wife over morning coffee. He pointed out that despite all signs of coming conflict, the War Department had done little or nothing to organize or equip a fighting force.

THE FORMER Marin County district attorney read aloud from the Marin Journal a report that President William McKinley had issued a call for 125,000 volunteers. These, with the 100,000 men in the state guard units, President McKinley felt, seemed to be enough to throw into the field against any nation.

"Unfortunately," Frank Angellotti said, "nobody has stopped to consider that there is no equipment and no arms for such a large force."

Finally on April 25, the Congress adopted a joint resolution establishing that a state of war

MILL VALLEY'S Red Cross ladies were busy workers during the Spanish-American War period, but nevertheless found time for the all-important cup of tea. Portrayed here are Mrs. Thomas Reynolds, president of the Mill Valley society; Kathleen Thompson (later novelist Kathleen Norris), vice president; a Miss Kingwell, secretary, and Miss F. Rea, treasurer.

with Spain existed. Commodore George Dewey was dispatched from Hong Kong to the Philippine Islands with instructions to destroy the Spanish fleet.

BY SATURDAY, May 1, Dewey's fleet reached Manila Harbor and Dewey issued the order, "You may fire when ready, Gridley," to Cap. Charles V. Gridley of the Olympia.

The flagship's eight-inch guns roared out and seven hours later the entire Spanish squadron was useless.

When news of the victory reached Marin, crowds gathered and danced in the streets.

"Oh, what a glorious war," former Marin Journal publisher Simon F. Barstow said to his wife Laura. "A Naval victory within the first week. Surely the war will be over in less than a month." He was wrong, the war was to be prolonged for over three years.

THE EASTERN and Southern states became the seat of the war which was first waged in the Spanish Caribbean Archipelago. The principal emergency relief work was done by the Red Cross, aided largely by the Cuban Relief Committee of New York, which raised over $215,000.

The surrender of the Spanish Army at Santiago speedily closed the military operations there, and the theater of war was transferred to the Philippine Archipelago. Troops for this campaign were mobilized on the Pacific Coast with headquarters in San Francisco.

All told, the number of officers and men going out and returning through the Golden Gate amounted to over 185,000 from June, 1898, to July, 1902.

EQUIPMENT issued years before the the National Guard units had deteriorated until it was almost useless. Haversacks had rotted, leather articles had decayed. Some of the new enlistees arrived with no changes of underwear, some had neither shoes nor socks.

With the order for the National Guard, as the First California Volunteers, to go to Manila, Red Cross Societies sprang into existence around the Bay Area.

Sausalito was one of the first of the suburban towns to respond to the needs of the troops. On May 16, 1898, the formidable Mrs. J. L. Tillinghast started collecting for the Red Cross on the ferryboat. The same day she bought a bolt of flannel for the troops with the donations.

MRS. WAKEFIELD Baker actually started the Red Cross in Marin County when she called a meeting in Sausalito on May 17, 1898. She was elected president of the newly formed Sausalito Red Cross Society, and Mrs. J. W. Harrison, of the lovely estate, La Vuelta, became vice president. Mrs. Louis Harrison was named secretary and Mrs. Tillinghast became treasurer.

The fast-moving ladies managed to "acquire" a room in the village, free of charge, which they used as headquarters for meetings, sewing, etc., and where they were assisted by several ladies from San Rafael.

The San Rafael ladies soon tired of the long trip to Sausalito.

On the morning of May 23, Mrs. Louis Sloss, wife of the Judge, gathered together a group who formed a San Rafael Red Cross Society. Mrs. Sloss became honorary president of the new volunteer organization. Mrs. John F. Boyd and Pauline Bradford, whose husband had been mayor of San Rafael for many years, were elected vice presidents, along with Mrs. Louis Gerstle, whose descendent Michael Wornum now sits on the Marin County Board of Supervisors.

HANNA WILKINS, whose magnificent estate, Violet Terrace, was given to San Rafael in 1930, also became a vice president. Her husband, Hepburn Wilkins, was considered Marin's ablest attorney.

Mrs. W. W. Morrow, wife of Judge Morrow, Mrs. Frank S. Johnson, and Mrs. W. J. Wickman, the former Hattie Dutton of Tomales, became vice presidents of the San Rafael Red Cross Society. Laura Barstow, wife of the former newspaper publisher and San Rafael City Trustee Simon Barstow, was elected treasurer, and Mrs. Angellotti, secretary.

Once the Society was formed, Mrs. George T. Page took over as president. George F. Foster's Chilean-born wife became vice president while Mrs. Barstow and Mrs. Angellotti stayed on as treasurer and secretary.

AN EXECUTIVE committee to the San Rafael Red Cross Society was formed which included Mrs. E. W. Newhall; Mrs. A. W. Foster; Mrs. William Sale, whose husband owned a furniture store; Mrs. A. F. Feckteler, wife of Lieutenant Feckteler; Edwina Dufficy, wife of Superior Court Judge M. C. Dufficy; Mrs. William Elliott; Mrs. Leon A. Lancel, whose husband served on the vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church; Mrs. Charles Christieson, wife of Major Christieson; Mrs. Thomas Winteringham, of Laurel Place; Mrs. John Alexander; Mrs. Sidney M. Smith, wife of the prominent lawyer; and Mrs. Sidney B. Cushing, wife of one of the founders of the Mt. Tamalpais Railroad.

When Mrs. Cushing's mother died in 1889, she placed a stained glass window in St. Paul's Episcopal Church as a memorial to Elizabeth Butterfield.

Mrs. Philip N. Lillienthal and Mrs. Hecht, San Francisco residents who "summered" in Marin, also served on the San Rafael Red Cross Society Executive Committee.

A FEW DAYS later an active Red Cross Society of 38 women was formed in Belvedere. Mrs. Albert Gebering was elected president and the very social Mrs. J. W. Pew was treasurer.

Most ladies had one visiting day a month, but Mrs. Pew was so active she held court on three visiting days a month at The Pagoda, in Belvedere. Mrs. Thomas Lake Miller, of Edgehill, became secretary.

The ladies entered upon their work, "immediately, enthusiastically, and with commendable results."

A Red Cross Society was also formed in Mill Valley. There, Mrs. Thomas Reynolds was elected president. Flora Reynolds later became president of the Outdoor Art Club, where Red Cross meetings were held, and postmistress of Mill Valley. Kathleen Thompson was elected vice president, Miss Kingwell secretary, and Miss F. Rea treasurer. Misses Kellogg and Grant served as members of the Mill Valley Red Cross Society Advisory Board.

IN LESS THAN one month after the first Red Cross Society was formed, the need of a state organization was recognized.

On May 25, 1898, a State Advisory Council, consisting of delegates from societies already formed, met. Present were Mrs. W. B. Harrington and Mrs. Wakefield Baker of Sausalito. Later Mrs. Angellotti, whose daughter Marian was then 10-years-old, was added to the state working force.

Applications for membership to the state society were received from 107 Red Cross Societies, including Belvedere, Mill Valley, San Rafael, Sausalito and Ross Valley.

About $180,000 was raised in California, much of it remote and interior towns. One enthusiastic worker told how money was raised in her county — by the children — and of contributions received from Indians. One dear old lady rode 20 miles over rough mountain roads to bring her donations of comfort bags, bandages, etc., as well as some "nice little delicacies for the sick boys."

IN VALLEY FORD there were auxiliaries of young girls. At entertainments for the troops they recited poems, breathing the fiercest sentiments against the Spanish. At this time there were many descendents of the original land grant grantees living in Marin — Reed, Sanchez, Sais — and many of them served with the U.S. forces.

All troops coming to California were met by Red Cross hospitality committees who gave them a substantial meal. In their first year of existenance the San Rafael, Sausalito and Belvedere Red Cross Societies welcomed thousands of soldiers. They also helped furnish lunches to all outgoing troops.

The long list of unknown dead of the Civil War was the inspiration for little "Identification Medals," which were furnished by the Red Cross to troops of the first expedition to the Philippines. The badges were made of aluminum, about the size of a half dollar, and were inscribed with the company, regiment and number of each soldier.

OWING TO the large quanities of supplies pouring in from all parts of the state, the Red Cross soon found it necessary to open a supply department. Mrs. E. W. McKinstry, wife of Judge McKinstry, prominent in Marin courts, was appointed chief of the State Supply Department of the California Red Cross Association.

Here is Mrs. McKinstry's report on a small portion of donations received from San Diego to Shasta from June to Aug. 6, 1898:

"21,784 abdominal bandages, 5,322 esmarch bandages (similar to today's Ace bandage), 2,638 rolled bandages, 10,308 comfort bags, 2,492 sheets, 5,585 denim pillow ticks, 239 hospital and surgical shirts, 13 Arab tents, 388 packages of literature, 397 boxes of fresh fruit, 103 sacks of dried fruit, 200 plaster of paris banadages, and 4,308 pillow cases."

MRS. McKINSTRY also reported receiving large quantities of groceries, preserves, vegetables, drugs and thousands of useful articles.

By mid-May the First California Volunteers were ordered to Manila on the City of Peking. They were accompanied by two male Red Cross nurses who had given up lucrative positions to offer their services to the Red Cross. When they arrived at Cavite, the nurses, A. Parker Lewis and Christian M. Waage, joined Marinite Fr. William McKinnon in caring for the sick and wounded.

Father McKinnon had just finished a five year stint at St. Vincent's School for Boys. He enlisted shortly after war against Spain was declared and was appointed chaplain of the First Regiment, California Volunteers, on May 13, 1898.

FATHER McKINNON, whose statue now stands in Golden Gate Park, died of cholera in the Philippines on Sept. 26, 1902.

Waage sent word back to California that he was, "in despair about the hospital supplies." They were absolutely inadequate to the demand. Besides being short of supplies, Waage and Lewis were short of nurses.

"Lewis has enough to do in the operating room," said Waage, "and I am busy all day going from patients in quarters to patients in hospitals. I move all day among typhoid and measles patients."

The crushing load took its toll of Lewis, who became ill and had to be returned to California.

TO TRY AND meet the need for nurses, the Red Cross arranged for a series of lectures for those desiring to become Red Cross nurses. Through the services of several doctors, including Dr. Rixford of the Sausalito Rixfords, a large class of men and women were able to attend daily lectures.

In June of 1898 San Rafael Company D was called up as part of the Eighth Regiment, California Volunteers, under the command of Col. Park Henshaw.

By August the Red Cross received permission to send more nurses to the Philippines on four transports engaged for the fourth expedition. They were the City of Pueblo, Peru, Pennsylvania, and the ill-fated Rio De Janeiro, which later sank in San Francisco Bay. They were to be used to take the troops to the Philippines and return as hospital ships, bringing back the sick and woulded.

ONE OF THE greatest desires of the Red Cross was granted when the organization was notified they could send a limited number of women nurses on these ships. From a long list, eight women were selected, along with eight male nurses.

When the nurses arrived in Manila they set up hospital tents which heavy rains rendered almost useless. They then secured a building at Ermita, which they fitted up for the special use of the California volunteers.

On the 8th of June, 1899, Waage returned to California with the First California Volunteers on the hospital ship Sherman. He observed, "We plowed our way across the Pacific, onwards and homewards, to where suspense should cease, when we of the Red Cross should have accomplished our mission and lay down our work."

BUT THE WORK of the Red Cross was not to be laid down! It became apparent that no provision had been made by the government for care of convalescent soldiers. Upon leaving the division hospital, they were returned to their tents and in their weakened condition contacted colds or suffered relapses.

Permission was given the Red Cross, in August, 1898, to open a home which became Letterman Hospital in 1911 — for convalescents in the Presidio.

In these early days of the Red Cross it was also called upon to aid in securing transportation home for soldiers discharged for disability, by reason of sickness contracted before enlistment. They were discharged without pay, had no means of getting home, and so, strangers in a strange land, sick and helpless, came to the Red Cross, whose kindness they had experienced while in camp.

WITH THE RETURN of the volunteers from the Philippines, more of this work became necessary. The Red Cross aided many discharged and stranded men to return to their homes. Many very sick men were accompanied by Red Cross nurses.

In this the Red Cross was greatly assisted by Maj. Gen. W. R. Shafter, commanding officer of the Department of the Pacific. His uncles were large landowners in Marin and their land is now in the U.S. Point Reyes National Seashore.

According to Helen Van Cleave Park, "Despite what we hear about the Rough Riders and Teddy Roosevelt, it was General Shafter who won the war."

THE SIGHT OF a young soldier buried in a rough shirt, with shavings for his pillow, and the utter helplessness of the government to deal with the conditions demanding relief at the Presidio, caused the Red Cross to form what was termed the Funeral Committee.

Mrs. Ada Van Pelt served on this committee. She was often seen taking the early morning ferryboat to San Francisco. The frequent deaths incident upon camp life necessitated the daily attendance of some member of the committee to see that flowers and flags were placed upon the coffin and grave of every soldier buried at the Presidio, and to communicate with faraway relatives.

A TRANSPORT Receiving Committee, also headed by Mrs. Van Pelt, relative of the late famous Marin landscape architect, Helen Van Pelt Wilson, was formed.

The ladies were allowed to board all incoming transports to provide information for the troops and look after the wants of the sick men.

EVEN BEFORE the "necessities" of the Spanish-American War were over, it became increasingly apparent that the work of the Red Cross would never be finished.

In 1901 the great Galveston, Tex., disaster was caused by wind and high water. A city of 40,000 people lost nearly 10,000 inhabitants in 24 hours. Red Cross relief work was carried on for two months under the supervision of Clara Barton, founder of the American National Red Cross. She was aided in her work by contributions from the California Red Cross.

THE SAN FRANCISCO earthquake and fire of April 18, 1906, was the first disaster where the President officially designated the American National Red Cross to administer the funds donated for disaster relief.

The earthquake did very little damage in San Rafael. At Olema and Pt. Reyes Station buildings were shaken from their foundation, and the modern stone Tomales Catholic Church was a mass of debris. Crowds of refugees from San Francisco cloekd to Marin County and committees were formed to take care of the stricken visitors.

To administer disaster funds two chapters of the American National Red Cross were quickly organized. In San Rafael E. B. Martinelli served as president, with L. A. Lancel as secretary and S. M. Augustine as treasurer. They were aided in their work by the Sausalito Chapter of the American National Red Cross. Mrs. W. J. Harrison was Sausalito Chapter President, Mrs. W. G. Morrow, vice president, Mrs. J. R. Hannify, secretary, and Frank Maino, treasurer.

MARTINELLI was appointed colonel for disaster relief.

General relief headquarters were opened in the King Building on Fourth Street. The Armory was headquarters for receiving clothing and food. Mrs. William Babcock was in charge of the Emergency Hospital and Mrs. W. J. Wickman of the nurses. It was estimated about 10,000 people from San Francisco were in Marin County at the time, either with friends or in relief camps.

By Aug. 12, 1912, the Marin County Chapter of the American National Red Cross was chartered. The Red Cross has served in Marin County through war and peace for 75 years. This May, the volunteer organization celebrates its Diamond Jubilee, its work still not finished.

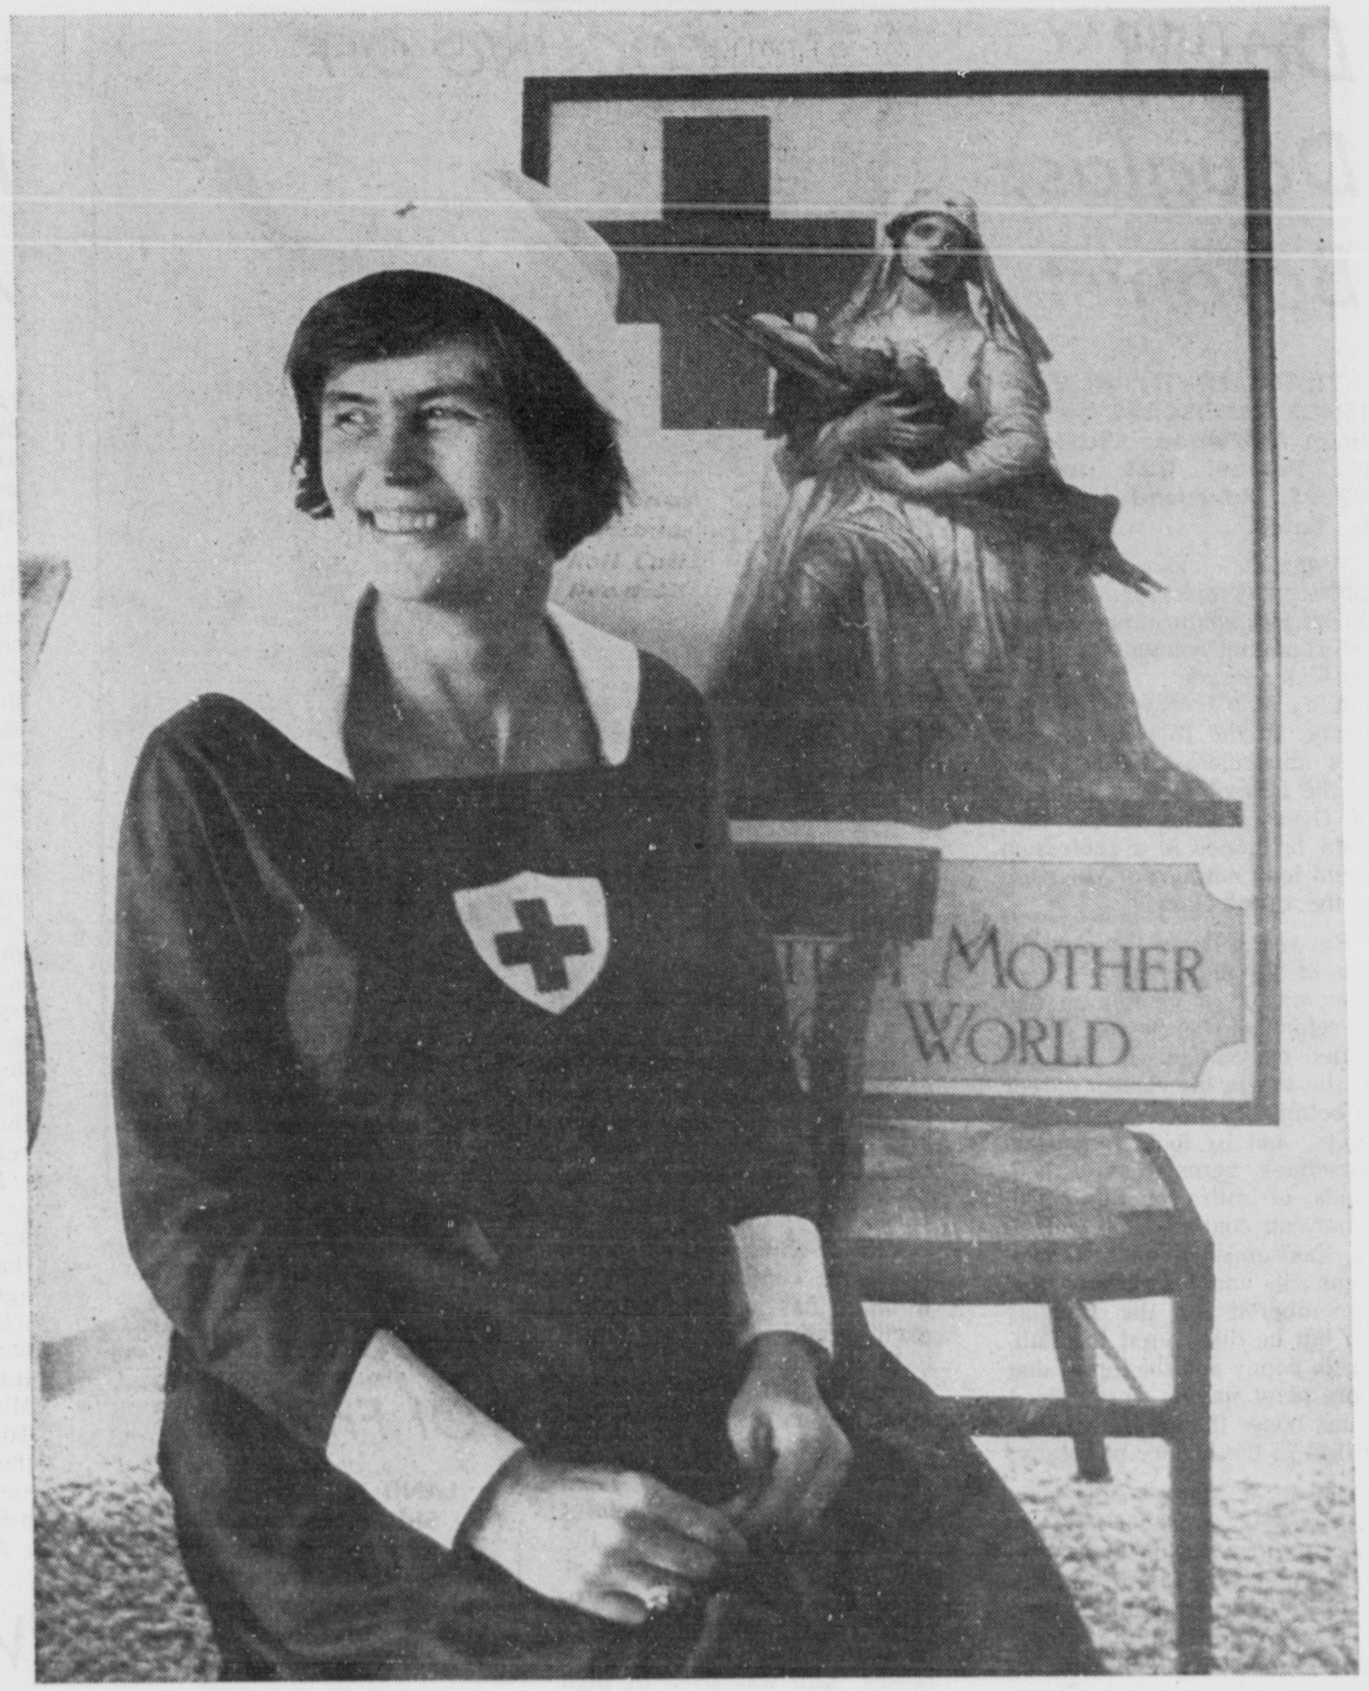
THE MODELS

The present-day American Red Cross volunteers of Marin County who posed for the photographs on these pages as representatives of the county's Red Cross leaders of 75 years ago are Mrs. John R. Barnard, Mrs. David Sexton, Mrs. Arnold Baptiste, Mrs. Edward J. Ruff, Mrs. Henry J. Broderick, Mrs. E. Gould Ingram and Mrs. Jerome Flax. Costuming by Dominican College and Mary Lou Jacobsen. Historical research assistance by Marin Historical Society; Helen Van Cleave Park and Marin Heritage.

THE UTTER helplessness of the government in time of great sickness and frequent death caused the formation of Red Cross Funeral Committees. Here the "stand-in" for Ada Van Pelto, committee member, leaves her home to take an early morning ferryboat to San Francisco to place flowers upon the coffin of a soldier, being buried at the Presidio, and to communicate with distant relatives.

MRS. FRANK ANGELOTTI became a member of the "state working force" of the newly formed State Advisory Council of the Red Cross in 1898. She instructed her maid to continue to prepare "nice delicacies for the sick boys" as a San Rafael Red Cross Society contribution to the wartime cause.

TO TRY AND meet the desperate needs of Red Cross workers in the Philippines for medical supplies, Red Cross volunteers in Marin acquired drug supplies that they bottled and then sent on to the California Red Cross Association supply department.



MARIN RED CROSS volunteers served as Canteen Workers, helping troops bound for overseas duty, during time of war. In peace, the volunteers continued their services with community assistance programs ranging from first aid and water safety training to disaster relief and nursing.

THE ANGELOTTI MAID then delivered the foods selected for their suitability for the ailing to the Red Cross Hospital Committee. It was that group's duty to distribute the contributions to the sick and wounded in hospital rooms that had been placed at the disposal of the Red Cross.

TROOP RECEIVING and hospital committees member Ada Van Pelt visited convalescing Spanish-American War soldiers at their sickbeds, dispensing cheer and comfort. Such humanitarianism is still the basic premise upon which the Red Cross functions today, 75 years after its coming to Marin County.

David Douglas, Botanist

Apprentice under-gardener to prestigous employment with the Royal Horticultural Society and international recognition in less than a decade - that could qualify as a success story even today. In the 1820s however it was miraculous; in the milieu of the inflexible social patterns of Great Britain of the day, even brilliance in a profession could lead nowhere if you were of the wrong class.

But young David Douglas, the son of an unpretentious Scots stonemason (a craftsman and therefore of the lower class), defied convention and made it to the top in his chosen career in botany. In a few bewildering years, and by foot, canoe and horseback, across tens of thousands of miles of the North American continent, he collected thousands of plant specimens. His name is perhaps best remembered for the Douglas fir, but he discovered the California poppy and the lupine and more plant species were named in his honor than for any other person in the history of botany.

The observations in his journal, particularly about the Oregon Territory and the vast Mexican province of California, are perhaps more readable than ever today in view of current interest in ecology and wildlife; but strangely enough his journal remained unpublished by the Royal Horticultural Society until 1914 or 80 years after his death.

Author William Morwood, a landscape contractor and Californian, has put together an exciting adventure story, which is the life of Douglas, from the journal and from the works of other chroniclers of the period.

Douglas was a man who never relaxed and seemed incapable of doing so; his associates found him difficult to say the least. He was a perfectionist which produced a sort of neurosis and so he judged himself by his failures rather than his successes. Life was lived at high tension and it ended at the age of 35 in Hawaii - in a native cattle pit. An accident, perhaps, but it is possible that he did away with himself.

But measured by his successes we may think of him as his own generation thought of him, as a man of unique talents and restless energy to whom every lover of plants is indebted.

William Morwood has radio and television scripts to his credit, and he has written short stories for the New Yorker; and in 1970 Doubleday published his book - "The Lazy Gardener's Garden Book."

LAND OF THE COYOTE by Shirley Holmes Cochell, as told by George Holmes Beine; Iowa State University, 193 pages, price not stated. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

"As told to" and "as told by" biographies are usually unsatisfactory. Either the scribe labors too hard to try to reproduce the language of the subject, or he goes too literary.

"Land of the Coyote" is an exception. Either Shirley Holmes Cochell of Los Angeles had an exceptionally graphic narrator in her uncle, Ross resident George Holmes Beine, or she did an exceptionally fine job of arranging his recollections without losing any of the flavor of his own accounts — or both.

Beines' German father was Omaha representative for a flour mill when he yielded to the lure of "new land" in 1907 and moved his family to South Dakota to buy a "proved up" homestead which turned out to be more run down than proved up.

George was 14 years old, second of three sons (there also was a daughter, aged 6) of the family. "Land of the Coyote" tells of his next few years, when he worked as farmhand, horse trainer and ranchhand to augment the Beines family income in their new home.

The picture it gives of life on the high Dakota plains in the early years of the century is a highly personal one — but highly illuminating because of that.

"Land of the Coyote" is first-rate.

John Braine Novel Is For Relaxing— And For Studying

THE QUEEN OF A DISTANT COUNTRY by John Braine; Coward, McCann and Geoghegan, 252 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by James Meldrum.

Although John Braine insists that his central character, Tom Metfield, is a purely fictional novelist, there can be no denying that the author of "The Queen of a Distant Country" has inserted episodes that could only have come from direct personal experience. This is a novel that, like Braine's "Room at the Top," concerns itself with the agonies of a young man struggling for success.

The impressive evidence of an artist's honesty confronts us in this work, for only by being truthful could the author give us the pulsating essence that describes, retrospectively, Metfield's adolescent dreaming and the irony of the dream being realized.

Metfield, although not another Faust who would sell his soul for success, is an Oedipus in that he is obliged to pay homage to his surrogate mother who has already made her name in the literary world. It is this symbolic mother figure, Miranda, who gave the young Tom the map that set him on the road from obscurity in a small English town to the Bohemian world of literary London.

Aspiring writers, would-be novelists and even active artists would do well to read and heed the words of the mature Metfield as he explores and examines the exploits of his past 20 years. The complications that arise because of Miranda's seniority, her declining morality and her later lack of sexual scruples function, fortunately for Tom, as a barrier that prevents the consummation of what would have been a disastrous affair for this young naive man.

Braine's capacity for capturing authentic dialogue is put to excellent use in this novel. We see his characters through their speech rather than by how they look. By allowing the reader to hear the characters, he gives them a versatility that can be associated with, even paralleled by, the reader's own experience and imagination. The author does not impose upon us the usual painted stereotypes, but gives us instead the freedom to fill in, perhaps subconsciously, the gaps that he intentionally leaves in his characters' descriptions.

This author's talents, like his characters, are well worth studying. This is a good novel and will please anyone who likes easy relaxed reading. It is also an excellent source of study for those who have ever thought of putting pen to paper in any creative manner.

Villainess Or Victim?— The Reader Must Decide

This is a haunting love story, a recreation of a crime of passion actually committed in French Canada in the 1820s.

Elisabeth d'Aulnieres, youthful beauty, carefully educated, sheltered by widowed mother and maiden aunts, makes an apparently brilliant marriage with Antoine Tassy, handsome master of Kamouraska, heir to a vast estate in northern Quebec.

But Antoine, after the wedding and in his native habitat, turns out to be a madman who alternates loving tenderness with drunken abuse.

After bearing two children, Elisabeth retreats to her home village where she meets George Nelson, an American doctor dedicated to his practice among the poor and a gentle man who is the emotional opposite of Antoine.

The inevitable happens, with help from Elisabeth. She and Dr. Nelson have an affair and decide since divorce in this Catholic region is unthinkable, that Antoine must die.

They scheme, finally dupe a half-witted housemaid into attempting to poison Antoine. She fails. Then Elisabeth — pregnant with Dr. Nelson's child — convinces him to act.

From these rather banal circumstances, writer Anne Hebert has fashioned an impressionistic, stream-of-consciousness novel. Elisabeth tells her own story. We follow the twisted trails of guilt through her mind — years later — as she waits for her second husband (not Dr. Nelson) to die.

This is a woman's book. More than anything else, Elisabeth's plight points up the hopeless situation of unhappily married women in the early 19th Century. We see the desperation of a sensitive, intelligent woman — granted that she has the instincts of a femme fatale — trapped by society.

Is Elisabeth villainess or victim? Who can assess her guilt? Her second husband, a vicious little clerk to whom she has borne eight children? Dr. Nelson, who ended by cursing her? Her housemaid, who served a prison term? Elisabeth herself, who knows no peace?

Anne Hebert's evocation of the intellectual and geographic isolation of early-day Canada, and of the bloody burtality of murder amid these frozen wastes, is superb.

"For you (the Nazi leadership), human beings were no more than a means of feeding your insatiable lust for power. You have destroyed our culture with its hundreds of years of history; you have destroyed the German people. That is the terrible burden of guilt you bear!" General Burgdorf to Martin Bormann, as quoted in "Hitler: The Last Ten Days."

The Death Throes Of The Third Reich

By DON KEOWN

HITLER: THE LAST TEN DAYS by Gerhard Boldt; Coward, McCann and Geoghegan, 224 pages, $6.95.

The death of Adolf Hitler in his underground Berlin bunker even as his once vaunted "thousand-year Reich" disintegrated over his head has been an event in history fogged by mystery and confusion.

Finally, from a prosperous German wine merchant who in that momentous year of 1945 was first a member of Reinhard Gehlen's intelligence staff, and then aide-de-camp to Gens. Heinz Guderian and Hans Krebs, Hitler's last two chiefs of the army general staff, we have received the closest thing yet to an eye-witness report of the Hitler suicide.

Gerhard Boldt renders his report in two forms: In a book, "Hitler: The Last Ten Days," which he began in an Allied internment camp immediately after World War II while his memories were fresh, and which he has now expanded.

And in a motion picture of the same title, for which he served as technical adviser, and in which Alec Guinness portrays Hitler and Simon Ward is cast as a Captain Hoffman based upon the real Boldt.

In his army capacities, Boldt visited regularly the underground chambers of the Reich Chancellery where Hitler had holed up with Eva Braun in a mole-like existence. Boldt mingled with German bigwigs, military and Nazi Party alike, and attended a number of the death throe conferences presided over by the German dictator.

From his observations we get one of our better pictures of what Adolf Hitler was like in his final days. What Boldt saw and heard rebuts the movement of a few years back that questioned the assumption that Hitler was mad. The sinister and evil egomaniac whom Boldt watched raving and ranting, torn between alternating spells of deep depression and irrational optimism, had to be a lunatic. His so-called strategy was devoid of any touch with reality, often so absurd it could not be executed, almost always lethal to those who blindly still followed the orders of the Fuhrer.

We get a picture, too, of a suddenly much aged, physically broken man for whom not even madness could provide a total protection from the knowledge of the doom that he had made inescapable for himself and his people.

Adolf Hitler is one of the few figures in history for whom it is impossible to mount the slightest feelings of compassion, and one almost regrets he is denied a firsthand report of Hitler's death throes, although by then pain and disappointment might well have been masked completely by insanity. Boldt, however, does his best to fill us in on Hitler's last mad act, following so shortly after his theater-of-the-absurd marriage to Miss Braun.

Boldt introduces us, too, to the other principal players in the Reich's last hours — the ambitious Martin Bormann, the buffoon Hermann Goring, the sinister Josef Goebels, Himmler, Kaltenbrunner, Speer, Koch, Saur and the Generals Keitel, Jodl, Krebs, Guderian, Burgdorf and Von Greim. He shows most of them as a scheming, jealous and selfish pack, engaged in self-serving plots to advance their own fortunes, careful always not to roil their tantrum prone Fuhrer and adept at playing upon his vanities.

Along with giving us a picture of what it was like to share with Hitler and his motley crew those final days, and to providing insights into their character, or lack thereof, Boldt's book is noteworthy as a reflection at that critical time in world history.

Boldt, of course, was an early non-Nazi or anti-Nazi. (But weren't they all? One sometimes gets a picture of a half dozen men at most coercing millions of good and reluctant people into following their evil commands.)

More revealing and less self-serving are Boldt's feelings as defeat becomes certain and disillusionment sets in. His firsthand observations of Hitler's erratic, callous leadership causes him to fix the blame upon the Fuhrer. His distaste and distrust of the Nazi leadership becomes embittered. But what is noteworthy is that the crimes for which Boldt — and no doubt many other disgruntled Germans — indicts Hitler are those he has committed against his own people and country — not against humanity and its innocents.

Boldt is horrified when Hitler orders the flooding of Berlin's subways to delay the Russian approach, disregarding the safety of the thousands of Berliners who had taken refuge in the underground. No similar shock is expressed over the leveling of Warsaw or Rotterdam by terror bombs. He is disgusted by the manner in which Hitler sends Berlin youths to their deaths in a final hopeless defense of Berlin. But there is no mention of the thousands of yet younger Jews and other captives who died even more needlessly in German death camps. He is outraged by the German casualties attributable to Hitler's amateurish strategy and tactics, but forgetful of the millions of all nationalities, in and out of uniform, who had perished because, astonishingly, a nation overwhelmingly had accepted a madman's claim to infallibility.

Predictably, he makes frequent mention of alleged atrocities by the invading Russians, while neglecting or denying the earlier German barbarities that had infuriated the Soviet soldiers and provoked their vengeance.

"Hitler: The Last Ten Days," then, is a revealing book — revealing as to what occurred in the bunkers beneath Berlin in the spring of 1945, and revealing, too, of the thinking not only of the Nazi leadership, but of those who had followed such leaders to the brink of defeat and destruction. One of several recent books on Adolf Hitler and his reign of terror, it is probably the most revealing of all for that misty period of his downfall and death. Certainly it is more authentic than the motion picture of the same title, and supposedly based on the book. Advance excerpts shown on television indicate considerable cinematic license has been taken with the Boldt book by the film-makers.

TWO NEW books on astrology, for "Believers" or those with open minds: "Astrology for Skeptics" (Macmillan, $6.95) by Charlotte MacLeod, who claims her book began as a debunking of the practice and wound up a defense of it. "Properly understood and used, astrology is neither risky nor transitory in its effects," she claims. "It can carry you to a far more satisfactory high than any drug." And she continues with a detailed explanation of astrology and its relationship to day-to-day living.

"The History of Astrology" (Arco, $7.95) by Zolar, one of the world's best known astrologists and writers on the subject, tracing its development from man's dimmest early history down to its present popularity and including all the expected charts and illustrations.

"FROM ABIGAIL to Zoe, here are more than 1,000 girls' Christian names, giving their origins, sailient facts and whether they owe their existence and popularity to personal beauty — or to some idiosyncrasy or whim of our ancestors centuries ago." So promises the dust jacket for "Girls' Christian Names" by Helena Swan, published by Charles E. Tuttle at $5.50. Fun reading as well as a useful reference.

Sleuths & Suspense

English author Davies' latest work is something of a cross between a science fiction story and a good old-fashioned British mystery, with the latter theme gaining precedence in the end.

The tale is of a young man who one moment is sitting in his room at his boys' boarding school, trying to decide which of two paths into the future to take, and then suddenly finds himself five years' hence.

For Howell Trowman, who remembers well the events of his past except for the last five years finding himself is a difficult job. Old friends shun him, his life obviously has not been a financial success and worst of all, he turns out to be suspected of murdering his former school friends.

In his search for the truth, he is aided by an attractive young woman, to whom, most of the time, he reacts alternately as a 17-year-old and a 23-year-old.

The tale is suspenseful and has a most satisfactory ending and is an enjoyable mystery, although Davies at times writes in a manner that could stand a little more editing than it received.

Europe: It Will Cost You More In '73

There's nothing like travel to broaden the mind and — in this year of inflation and devaluation — to flatten the pocketbook.

Americans traveling in Europe and its environs will find costs 5 to 40 per cent higher than they were a year ago. And no one was giving away anything last year.

The increases are across the board. That is, almost everything is up in price — clothing, souvenirs, food and all the other things tourists and natives like to buy.

WHAT THIS MEANS is that the traveler must aim for value for his dollar, control his tipping, exchange his money at the best rates, take advantage of cheaper travel where such exists, and use a hotel that is at least as interested in giving good service as it is in collecting higher rentals.

Consider this wisdom from an experienced traveler, David Hagy, a United Press International correspondent currently headquartered in Bonn:

"The effect upon the American tourist of devaluation will be much tougher if the tourist does not heed this advice: change your money at a bank or your travelers check office, not at your hotel. A tourist typically will suffer about a 13.5 per cent devaluation of his dollar now as against pre-crisis rates. But he will absorb about a 21 per cent devluation if he takes the lazy route at the hotel desk.

IN DOLLAR AND cents terms a tourist family of four could easily waste at least $100 a week by taking hotel exchange rates."

Nagy has another tip if West Germany is on your itinerary: Instead of buying the usual dollar travelers checks and changing as you go, consult your banker about buying marks at a U.S. bank and transferring them to a German bank. When you get to Germany take your marks in German travelers checks.

There are two advantages: Your money is in Europe's most stable currency and avoids the exchange rates vagaries for the dollar at each border crossing, and the exchange rate for bank transfers is the best you can get.

IN LONDON, prices are about 12 per cent higher this year than last in terms of the dollar. Despite a number of new hotels it is still difficult to book into luxury or first class hotels where prices range from $20 to $35 single and from $25 to $45 double per day.

London has a very large number of fairly comfortable hotels in the middle grades and provided the tourist does not expect a lush lobby or haute cuisine these are the answer for the budget traveler. Prices range from under $5 for bed and breakfast spots to $12 a day for genuine hotels.

One cautionary note: some bed and breakfast places charge all rooms for double occupancy.

THE DOLLAR IS down about 10 per cent in purchasing value in France and menus with scratched out old prices are common. A bistro near the United Press International office suddenly upped the price of a bottle of Bordeaux from $1.80 to $3.10 and no one was surprised.

Paris accommodations cover all prices — you can camp in the Bois de Boulogne for about 50 cents or pay $50 a day and more at the Crillon. Paris hotels usually have rooms in June, July or August but are crowded in the spring and autumn.

Hotel rooms are always a problem in Rome and discerning travelers book well in advance. There are numerous small pensions at from $4.50 to $6.50 a day. At the other end is the Hilton at $24 single and $38 for the best double, with 21 per cent for service on top of that. A double at the elegant Grand or Excelsior will run $60 a day.

DOLLAR TRAVELERS in Spain will spend 18 per cent more than last year, half of it because of inflation, the other half because of devaluation. Hotel prices are up seven per cent and there are generally rooms available except at the very height of the summer season. In luxury establishments prices for a double with bath are about $35 a day, about half of that in a good hotel and about $9 in a decent motel or simple hotel. Singles work out at one-third less.

With devaluation cutting it by 9 per cent and with raging inflation it will buy some 30 per cent less than 18 months ago. Nevertheless, Vienna remains very popular and some hotels book two years in advance. The 500-room Intercontinental has been solidly booked for a year.

THE LESSON is: reserve early.

The only time a surprise visitor has a chance for a room is July or August when the two biggest tourist attractions — the Spanish Riding School and the Opera House — are closed.

THE UNUSUAL MOUNTAIN formations of Rondane National Park in Norway, with 10 peaks at higher than 6,000 feet, are an example of why the high country of Scandinavia holds such an attraction for Norwegians and foreigners alike. A bicycle trail at elevations up to 4,000 feet will open up the mountains to more adventurers.

Bicycle Trail Across The Roof Of Norway

The very first mountain trail for bicycles ever built in Europe is under construction in Norway. It stretches literally across the "Roof of Norway," since it runs across the Hardanger Mountain plateau at an elevation of up to 4,000 feet between Haugastol and Myrdal.

Equally remarkable is the international work gang that is building the road — because it is made up of young volunteers ages 18 to 35 years. They are strictly amateurs, but all are members of the youth hostel association in their own country.

The work gang consists of 75 members, both male and female, including some young Americans. The road project was started in 1971, and turned into such a popular venture that over 1,700 youngsters from 11 countries wanted to enrll last year.

Owing to the high altitude, the work camp is restricted to July and August only. The construction work is supervised by engineers from the Norwegian State Railways, and the young workers are accommodated in barracks on the Bergen railroad — the most scenic railway in Europe. Hot food is brought daily by train in special containers from Geilo Youth Hostel.

American and Canadian youth hostelers wishing to participate in 1973, should write before June 15 to the Norwegian Youth Hostel Assn., Dronningensgate 26, Oslo 1, Norway.

Information about many other unusual vacations in Norway is available from Scandinavian National Tourist Offices, 505 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y., 10017, and 3600 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, Calid., 90010.

THIS IS A ROOM in Paris' most exclusive museum, originated by a saddlemaker for Russia's czars, and located on the hoity-toity Faubourg Sainte Honore. You visit it only by invitation.

The Museum That You Visit By Invitation Only

By JEFFREY ROBINSON

PARIS, France — Thierry Hermes was the official saddlemaker of the Russian czars some 150 years ago when his small shop was along the Boulevard Capucines.

Today his name is on the door of a large shop just down the block from the French president's Elysee Palace on the Faubourg Saint Honore. It is one of the world's most fashionable houses of leather. And the fourth floor is one of this city's "in" museums.

"It's not as if the museum is closed to the public," explains one of the smartly dressed, extremely attractive young hostesses who meets every customer at the front door. "It's just that access to the musuem is by invitation only. It's a very unique museum."

SHE SAYS AT one time it was open to the general public, but the museum's management started to find various pieces missing. Then again, this is the Faubourg Saint Honore, and the people who regularly shop along the street are more than used to having things exclusive and private. Neighbors of Hermes are the fashion houses which every season make top fashion news.

Although the collection was begun by Thierry Hermes, it was his grandson Emile who is largely responsible for the several hundred "'objets d'art" in the museum. He devoted so much time to collecting the pieces, and felt so dearly for them, that he turned the fourth floor into his office.

"It was about 70 or 75 years ago," the hostess goes on. "He worked and saw his customers here. And he decorated the place with his toys, you might say. Lots of them are involved with horses. There are several dozen saddles. And then he added such things as a pair of stirrups that was once used by Napoleon. He also has a bit that was handmade in the 8th Century B.C. in Louristan, near Persia."

BESIDES A number of saddles bearing the mark of his grandfather, Emile Hermes added to the collection a very rare Persian saddle that is in at least 10 different colors and dripping with rare gems. Sitting not far from it is a saddle from Japan, handcrafted in wood.

"I guess after saddles, Monsieur Hermes liked travel cases best," the guide says, pointing to the several heavy leather cases, most about the size of a small suitcase.

They contain trays of items that make up just about anything and everything anyone could ever have wanted to take on a trip. Popular with the very rich during the last century they are jammed with mirrors, combs, toothbrushes, glasses, hair brushes, small vials, boot horns, and any number of strange-looking things whose uses have been lost to time.

"The very special travel cases," she says, "were designed by a French artist in the early 1800s named Biennais. Each one of his cases was completely different. There are several here, and you can see that no two are even remotely alike. He never built the same travel case twice. The only thing the same about them is that they are very heavy. I'm not sure how much they weigh, but I can't lift one.

"THEN AGAIN, I guess if you could afford to buy one, you could also afford to have somebody carry it for you."

Another case, against a wall, is a large leather box that, after pressing the right place, unfolds into a cot. They were common, it seems, with British officers during the wars in India. Servants carried them so the officers fighting the battles didn't have to sleep on the ground.

"They look very uncomfortable," the young French hostess says. "But just the idea of them; it's really very British."

One of the items that is nothing short of "very French" is a powder horn that belonged to one of the three musketeers.

"Everyone asks which one," she nods. "And very honestly, I don't have any idea."

At the other end of the office museum is the large leather desk that Emile Hermes used. Next to that are two bookcases. The one onthe left would fascinate almost anyone as it is filled with old and rare books, most of them bound in leather. Some of the books contain original maps and etchings of 17th and 18 Century Paris.

At first glance, the bookshelf next to it looks like it might contain a similar type of collection. On the second and closer glance, it can be seen that the books are not books at all, but rather "fronts." One of them pulls out, and the whole shelf easily slides away, revealing a passage out of the office.

"This is my favorite," the guide says. "Today it only leads to the hallway. But secret doors are very romantic. The idea is very daring, and I'm certain it didn't lead to just anything way back then. Who knows what was really back there when it was built?"

A Big Year For Vacation Campers

By WILLIAM LAFFLER

All estimates are that more Americans than ever will choose camping vacations this year. It has become a holiday way of life for Americans of all ages.

There's no doubt about it, camping can be fun. And it can save money at the same time. But the wise would-be camper plans ahead.

Nothing can be more frustrating than to pull into a campground at twilight and be told that it is "filled up." Usually another campground is not within easy driving distance, so the family has to put up at a motel and hope for better luck the next day.

Each year, as the number of campers has multiplied, more campgrounds have been constructed. But there still are not enough to take care of the peak vacation-time load.

Campers should always plan ahead by mapping their trip and making reservations for overnight stops, especially in mid-summer. It is wiser to go camping before the Fourth of July and after Labor Day when campgrounds are less crowded.

Outdoor camping has many things to recommend it. It is much more economical for a family of four or five to spend a vacation camping than at a resort. Most campgrounds charge less than $4 a night, including electric hookups. Some camps offer free movies or activities such as hayrides and hiking expeditions.

There are drawbacks. Rain can spoil a day in a camp. So can bees and mosquitoes. But veteran campers get used to bad weather and insects.

Many newcomers will go camping this year if for no other reason than to fight inflation and the higher cost of living. Some of them will foolishly buy recreation vehicles and find at the end of the season that they really don't like camping after all.

Recreation vehicles are ideal for big families who plan to spend every vacation on the road. The more expensive models have toilets, showers and bathtubs built in and they pay for themselves in five years or less.

The beginning camper should hold off on a recreation vehicle and start with a tent, which will pay for itself in savings in one summer. Fancy tents are expensive, but sturdy and roomy ones can be purchased for less than $100.

Before going on the first camping trip, the father of the family should set up the tent in his backyard, or plan an afternoon outing in a place where the tent can be erected. The beginner should never wait until he gets to the campsite to put up a tent for the first time.

The original outlay also should include sleeping bags and cots, flashlights and lanterns, a propane stove, pots and pans, paper plates, a habachi and charcoal, insect repellants and first aid kits.

Tents should be pitched on fairly level ground. A slight slope is preferable because rain will drain away from the tent.

It is not necessary to buy a refrigerator because plastic ice chests will serve the same purpose. Block ice will last much longer than cubes or crushed ice.

A camper should be able to tell at the end of his first trip whether he enjoys this kind of living. Then he can put his money in a recreation vehicle.

The Bighorn Sheep's Last Resort

THE MAJESTIC SIGHT of the rare desert bighorn sheep is a delight that can be experienced by the visitor to the wild mountainous area that surrounds the resort city of Palm Springs, Calif., and can be enjoyed few places else upon this earth. More easily observed are two of the handsome animals being kept, pampered and studied in Palm Springs' Living Desert Reserve.

Construction crews, who are pushing a new highway through the Santa Rosa Mountains above the community have now grown accustomed to the presence of bighorn sheep. Crewmen say the animals will squat for hours at a time atop a nearby rock outcropping, from which vantage point they watch the road's progress.

Several bighorns were also on hand to observe the building of a new million-dollar tennis facility.

And because of the sheeps' long-established affinity with the general Palm Springs area, Atajo, a 45,000-acre land development area, here, has "adopted" the animal. The head of a ram has become the symbolical representation of the organization.

IT IS NOT uncommon here for people traveling mountain highways to catch a glimpse of a spiral-horned ram silhouetted atop a distant ridgeline. The rare sheep also are seen from the famed Palm Springs Aerial Tramway. This mountain "people-mover" carries visitors from near sea level to the 8,500 foot level of Mt. San Jacinto. Horseback riders who travel trails into the scenic Indian Canyons also have spotted the sheep.

Karen Fowler, comely director-naturalist of the giant Living Desert Reserve, said the Palm Springs area harbors the largest population of bighorn in all of California.

"There are approximately 400 to 500 of the rare sheep in the Santa Rosa Mountain range," she says. "In California it is illegal to hunt or possess the animals. But the sheep are still faced with extinction."

SHE EXPLAINED that although the animals are fully protected by state laws their main threat is man, as he begins to develop areas that were formerly inhabited by the sheep. But to prevent the sheep from taking other refuge, conservation-minded developers in Palm Springs have begun to do something about it.

Owners of the Thunderbird Country Club, for example, have set aside a section of their posh, exclusive property for the sheep, constructing a water hole for the animals' exclusive use.

Mrs. Fowler said study of the rare sheep indicates that they will seldom use water holes other than their own. The Thunderbird water hole is a rare success story in itself, she said.

DEVELOPERS OF the extensive Atajo project have allocated large areas of open space to allow the sheep their full range of movement. The behavior patterns of the sheep are being studied in an effort to determine their watering places, lambing areas and vantage points. Major developers have indicated agreement not to disturb such areas.

Because of the bighorn sheep's threatened extinction, two of the animals have been transported from their habitat to the Living Desert Reserve.

The reserve opened in 1970 for educational purposes and the preservation of the desert landscape. The sheep are under constant study by biologists from the University of California at Riverside.

A NATURAL mountainous area within the reserve has been provided for the sheep, where they can roam freely in familiar surroundings.

Lloyd Tevis, associate specialist, says the research site provides the public the rare opportunity to see bighorns at close range. "Very few persons see them in the wild, and the law doesn't allow them to be captured for display purposes," he added.

Tevis said the ram was trapped as a lamb and promptly named Little Britches. He's learning to approach students who work at the Living Desert Reserve.

THE TAMER of the two is Gumdrops, his older and smaller mate. Gumdrops goes to her human friends at the reserve, eats from their hands and seems to enjoy having her head scratched. Found after she had been injured by an automobile, she was cared for by a game warden until her recovery.

Biologist Jack Turner, who is in charge of the bighorn sheep project, said the primary function of the observation at the reserve is to find out how much range an individual sheep requires, its reproduction habits and the best way to acclimate it to a new environment.

Bighorn sheep in the Palm Springs area are found at elevations between 2,000 and 4,000 feet. According to naturalists, the sheep population here seems to be fairly stable.

A LARGE, striking animal measuring 60 inches long, the desert bighorn weighs up to 200 pounds. Equipped with extraordinary mountaineering abilities, the bighorn can bound up and down cliffs and calmly negotiate smooth, slippery rock.

The secret of the bighorn's ability is its hoofs, which have tough, pliable outer shells and soft rubbery inner pads. These pads act as shock absorbers and will grip any surface, according to Turner.

There are few things more heartwarming in the mountains surrounding Palm Springs than a glimpse of the bighorn lambs.

Bouncing about, playing "king of the castle," they can be as playful and entertaining as their domestic counterparts.

No one knows how or why the sheep came to the sun-drenched desert area, unless it was for the same reason as their human counterparts: serenity and, of course, the year-around sunshine.

In Praise Of The Exotic Pomegranate

An exotic fruit well-known in Mexico, Asia and the Middle East and only now gaining new friends in the United States is the pomegranate.

Pomegranate trees have been grown in the garden in the past for their decorative appearance. The fruit gives color to the home at Thanksgiving and Christmas, yet it has many uses. People in the Middle East, especially Turks, Armenians and Greeks, marinate lamb and other meats with the juice. In Mexico they make a punch adding the pomegranate seed.

We in the U.S. have not taken to the pomegranate because of our lack of knowledge of its culinary qualities. For most people, the fruit has too many seeds, yet the red juice and the seeds have a piquant, bitter-sweet tang.

THE POMEGRANATE trees seem to live forever and they are probably the longest living fruit trees, some as old as 200 years. Homer mentioned them in the "Odyssey" and they appear in the Bible and in "Arabian Nights."

A pomegranate is a semi-tropical tree and will stand almost any amount of heat, but is injured by temperatures dropping below 15 degrees F and when the freezing is of long duration. It does well in California, and in Florida, Arizona, Texas and most of the southern states where no snow falls.

Pomegranates will tolerate a saline soil such as few other trees can. Buy a tree that is two to three years old. Dig a wide hole, two feet deep. Well-spaded soil helps the growth. The tree is usually pest free and no spraying is necessary. It should be fertilized in late winter with a general balanced fertilizer, and again in the spring.

THE TINY SHOOTS that come up at the base should be cut away in January or February. Plant the dwarf pomegranate variety for decorative purposes only as it bears small unedible fruit.

From spring through early summer the hibiscus-like flowers of the pomegranate tree give a blaze of color. As the fruit gets larger and ripens the trees present a spectacular oriental appearance. Do not over water. In summer, water once a month or every six weeks.

For use in cooking, cut the pomegranate in half and scoop juice and seeds into the blender. Run the blender until there is a free running juice. Strain. Marinate lamb or other meats with it. It not only tenderizes the meat but gives it a special flavor.

THE JUICE CAN be kept in a glass jar or bottle in the refrigerator for weeks and even months without spoiling, or it can be frozen.

A way to avoid the bitter taste of the seeds is to roll the fruit until soft and cut a hole in the blossom end and squeeze as much juice out as possible.

TOMATO VINES IN THE KITCHEN

Dr. Virgin suggests that tomatoes can be grown in the kitchen, living room or den. Here are some tips if you want to try:

SOIL: Buy it at a nursery — it's inexpensive and disease-free. If you simply cannot bring yourself to pay for it, get some from a friend's garden and bake it in your oven for three hours at 200 degrees. The heat will kill any harmful fungi. But be careful. Too much heat will turn valuable organic material to ash.

Put the soil in an eight-inch clay pot, water it well and let it sit for a day or two before planting.

SEED: Dr. Virgin recommends five standard varieties which are suited to reduced sunlight conditions: Tiny Tim, Small Fry, Patio, Ace and Manapal. All are available through nurseries and seed catalogues.

The first three are dwarfs advertised for ornamental value as well as the quality of their cherry-size fruit. The Ace and Manapal are full-size tomato plants and will require a good deal of growing room.

PLANTING AND thinning: Punch three or four holes about three-fourths of an inch deep into the soil and place a seed in each. Cover and water. Shoots will appear in five to 10 days. It's a rule of green thumb to wait until the seedlings are three inches tall before thinning down to one per pot.

Be sure to place the plant where it will get the most sun. Anchor a trellis near its base so vines will have support later when fruit begins to set.

POLLINATION: Tomato plants are self-pollinating; you'll need no bees. However, in the windless environment of your home, it won't hurt to give Mother Nature assistance. As each flower becomes fully developed, flick the vine near it a few times. This will dislodge pollen.

SOME ADDITIONAL advice from Dr. Virgin:

If you smoke wash your hands before handling the plant. Many tobaccos harbor a destructive virus which can be transmitted easily to your tomato plant. Don't overwater.

Handyman's Pages

THE POURING of a cement patio is not a project to be undertaken lightly. Still, it is a job easily within the capabilities of the average home handyman — given a little expert guidance. For that guidance, send $2 to Steve Ellingson, Independent-Journal Pattern Department, Post Office Box 2383, Van Nuys, Calif., 91409, and ask for Pattern 514. Include your zip code number. You will get instructions plus step-by-step drawings, not only for the patio, but for the block wall as well. Covered are such vital factors as estimating materials, concrete formulas, setting forms, footings, troweling, curing, flagstone marking, even curbs and steps. Then if you want to go further and complete your patio setting, you can also order Pattern 162 for the cement block barbecue, $1; Pattern 182 for the double chaise, $1; Pattern 174, the single chaise, $1, and Pattern 62, the barbecue dining set, $1. All you need then for outdoor living and dining is your own recipe for the barbecue sauce. For that, you will have to turn to your favorite cookbook.

INSIDE YOUR HOME: A New Look For Twin Beds

By CAROLYN MURRAY

Getting tired of twin beds that look the same day in and day out?

There is a monotony to twin beds; you can arrange them in just so many positions —especially if space is rather limited.

There's one new idea for you to try in the bedroom illustrated today. It was planned by interior designer Lee Bailey, and doesn't take a big investment in carpentry or furniture — just bed linens!

THE DESIGNER suggests you buy some ordinary molding (or not-so-ordinary molding) at the building-supply dealer's or hardware store. There are many different designs available as stock items. Try to match existing molding, but if that's not possible, find a compatible type.

Paint the new molding before you nail it to the ceiling at right-angles over each bed, as shown.

Designer Bailey then used a coordinated line of bedding to make a mock canopy. It is Springmaid's Bed-Lib collection and is 50 per cent Kodel polyester and 50 per cent cotton — and even has a Scotchgard finish.

THE SHEETS and pillowcases have blue-green bordered hems that are described as French cuffs, so they're a natural for this kind of installation.

The forsythia-colored sheets were chosen to create hanging panels at four corners of each bed. These are lined with a pink-purple floral, called Water Flowers, and they match the top sheets and pillowcases. Another forsythia-colored sheet was used to create a skirt for each bed, with the border positioned to match the French cuff effect on the curtain panels.

It's a very smart look and, best of all, it's totally machine washable. The Scotchgard finish allows you to use the curtain panels a lot longer than the sleep surfaces before laundering.

ANOTHER CLEVER device is the use of French-cuffed pillowcases as window blinds. These have been slit to make them useful as long vertical pieces of fabric, then flaps or pleats have been stitched into them to create a bit of interest. Again the blue-green border motif works as a decorative notion.

With a few potted plants, a floral painting or two, this newly dressed room is an altogether effective interior, day in, day out; night in, night out.

A Wall-Full Of Storage

Got a storage problem? Develop a hang-up.

This hang-up is a storage wall created with perforated hardboard panels. Brackets on which to mount shelves and hooks from which to hang items, fit into the perforations. The panels are easily installed over furring strips attached to the existing wall. One panel, or a wall-full, provides as much storage space as you need.

TO STAIN OR NOT TO STAIN?

By ANDY LANG

The continuing use of redwood in patio furniture, porches, fences, house siding and garden structures calls attention to the great freedom of choices in the way it can be finished — or left the way it is.

If untreated, redwood will change color, sometimes achieving a variety of shades over the years.

Exactly which colors cannot always be accurately determined, since there are a number of factors affecting both the transitional and eventual permanent appearance. Generally, however, it can be assumed that redwood kep outside in a dry climate will turn a silvery-tan, getting lighter and lighter over the years.

IN A DAMP or humid area, redwood will darken fairly quickly, but frequent rinses from the rain will gradually turn it into a soft gray. That's why a fence, subject to these rain rinsings, will become gray in time, but an object made of redwood 10 or 15 feet away which is sheltered from both rain and sun will get darker and stay that way.

In my own experience with redwood, I have favored the use of a water repellent. It retains the natural texture and grain of the wood, slows down any tendency to fading and adds an extra measure of preservative to the already natural resistance of redwood to decay and ravages of weather. It is exceptionally easy to apply with a brush, immediately sinking into the wood.

Many persons swear by pigmented stain, especially the type that imparts a richer red color to the wood.

THE STAIN IS not like paint. That is, it does not cover the wood. But it tends to obscure the grain at first, a condition that disappears as the finish weathers.

One advantage of both the water repellent and the stain is that the wood is easy to refinish when it becomes necessary.

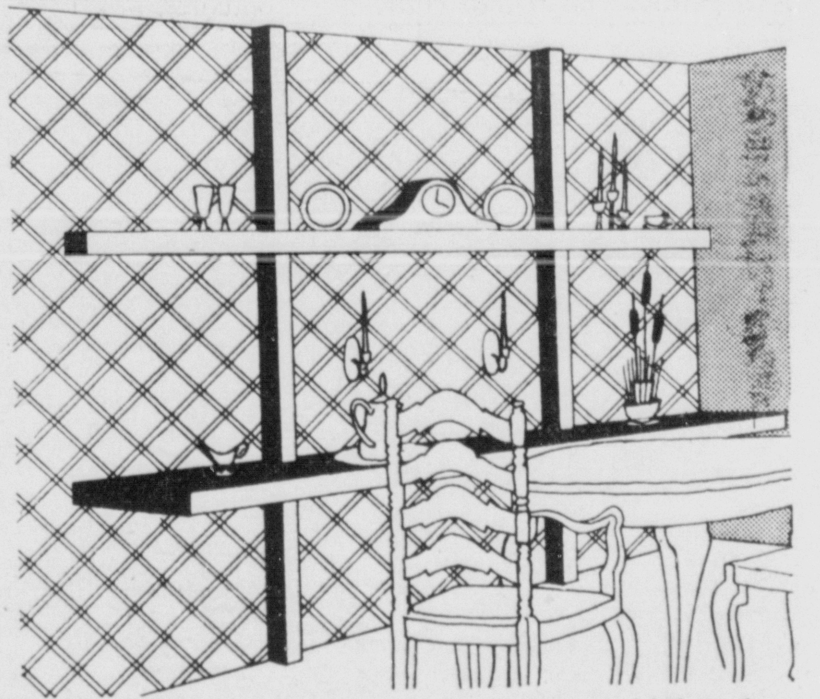
Still another way of treating redwood is with a bleach. This is done when you want the wood to turn to the driftwood gray that it might take years to achieve by natural weathering.

Can redwood be painted? Of course. It takes paint well.

On new wood, one base and two finish coats are recommended, using an oil-based primer as the base coat. I have seen some beautifully finished redwood siding, but I must admit that I have a weakness for redwood in its natural state and would never consider painting it.

NO MATTER which finish you use, some attempt should be made to keep it from drying too quickly.

One way to do this is to keep the object being finished out of the sun. When this cannot be done — as in the case of a fence, for instance — apply the finish during the coolest part of the day.



HEAVY SHELVES strengthen this room's character and help make it the perfect place for informal dining. Posts of four-by-four-inch wood over boldly-patterned wallpaper hold four-by-four-inch eye-level display shelf, while a lower four-by-12-inch shelf doubles as a sideboard, buffet seating, writing desk and craft work area.

Planks Lend Character To Dining Area

Distinction can be added to a modest dining alcove to create a special, comfortable mood often lacking in less formal areas.

Many homes don't have a separate dining room, but dining in or near the kitchen still can be accomplished with style.

If the area reflects the good tastes of the family, it's likely also to give pleasure to company.

FIRST, AN unfussy wallpaper will add pattern to the shelf wall, or paint can be applied to complement the furnishings.

The main shelf, about 30 inches off the floor, is one four-by-12 inch plank or eight two-by-fours nail-laminated on edge. To be used as a sideboard and even for extra places for buffets, it must be set on sturdy brackets.

Vertical four-by-four inch posts extend from floor to ceiling, two or three depending on length of shelves. An upper shelf, set at eye level for display of prized china or nicknacks, is of the same four-by-four lumber.

Posts can be cut or notched, but the shelf should have a continuous appearance. Lag screws set deep in shelf and posts to fasten to wall studs look neater than brackets.

WESTERN SOFTWOODS, such as fir, pine or hemlock, are well-suited for the shelf system, and will take any finish well. Stain can be matched to the furniture or with certain backgrounds and furnishings a stark white painted finish is effective.

This shelf arrangement also can be used as a desk for school or office homeowrk, writing letters and paying bills, or for hobbies and crafts.

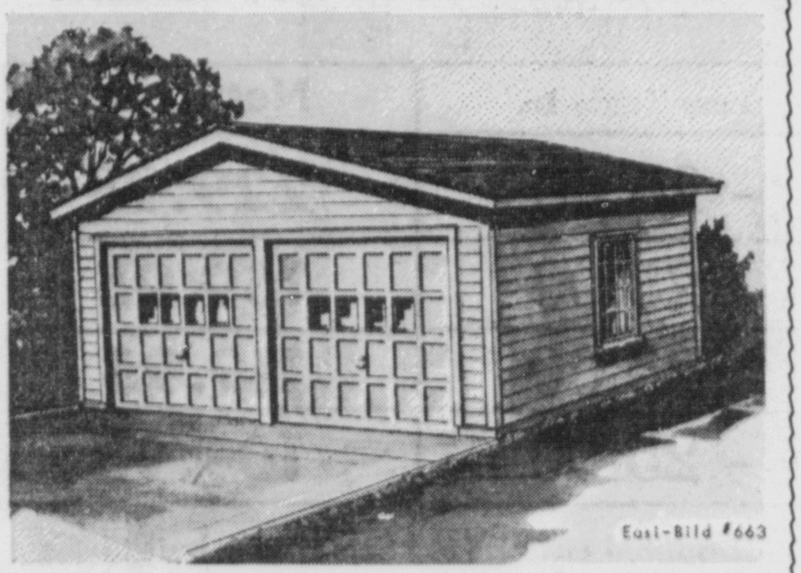
If the dining area directly adjoins the kitchen, it can be made more intimate in several ways — a dropped ceiling or lattice of one-by-twos over the table, a decorative screen of wood slats or dowels, or island counters that divide and serve both areas.

MAKING THE HOME SAFE

Protecting a home and its occupants against fire and intrusion is covered in a newly published 26-page booklet which includes a personal property inventory on which the reader may list pertinent information including make, model and serial number of cameras, appliances and other valuables.

Entitled "Safe at Home," the booklet is available for 25 cents from ADT, Box 325, New York, N.Y., 10013.

SHELTER FOR YOUR TWO CARS



DONALD R. BRANN and his Easi-Bild Pattern Co. are the sources of a book, "How to build a Two-Car Garage," that they promise will enable the average home handyman to build his own shelter for the family automobiles. For the book, send $1.50 to Independent-Journal pattern department, Easi-Bild, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., 10510, specifying the book by title and by number — 663. You will receive step-by-step directions, more than 50 illustrations, a materials list, plus instruction on site selection, building permits, excavating foundation trenches, etc. The finished garage measures 20 by 24 feet, enough for the power mower and other equipment along with the cars.

ERIC WOOFE in his role as composer-conductor Johann Strauss (the father), and Barbara Ferris, as his mistress Emilie, smile in acknowledgement of the plaudits of admirers who have dubbed Strauss "the Waltz King of Vienna." BUTCH PATRICK, as Bumper, an orphan boy who has found a new home on a sheep farm, patiently and tenderly feeds a lamb in a scene from "The Young Loner," a two-part adventure drama to begin Sunday at 7:30 p.m. on Channels 3 and 4 on "The Wonderful World of Disney."

TELEVISION NOTES

By JACK GAVER

A two-hour version of Alexandre Dumas' famed novel, "The Count of Monte Cristo," is in NBC's future. The show will be filmed in Europe.

ABC's fall schedule will contain a half-hour animated show, "The MAD Magazine TV Special," based on various satirical elements of that zany publication.

The title role in "Lisa, Bright and Dark," a "Hallmark Hall of Fame" drama for NBC next season, will be played by 19-year-old Kay Lenz. Anne Baxter and John Forsythe play the parents of a 17-year-old girl gradually slipping into mental illness.

Two CBS daytime serials, "As the World Turns" and "The Edge of Night," are now in their 18th year on the netowrk. Both made their debuts on April 2, 1956.

Charles M. Schulz will be the grand marshal of the 1974 Rose Bowl Parade in Pasadena, Calif. The father of the "Peanuts" cartoon strip will have to guard against being over-shadowed by that pushy beagle, Snoopy.

The baseball season on television has been made brighter by NBC's hiring of Joe Garagiola to do 15 pre-game shows preceding the network's prime-time major league baseball games on Monday nights. The old catcher does his first show on May 21.

ARTHUR RUBINSTEIN is to be a guest of Dick Cavett on the "ABC Wide World of Entertainment" Thursday at 11:30 p.m. on Channels 7 and 11. Joining the host and the venerable master of the concert piano will be 13-year-old violin virtuoso Lilit Gampel.

Summer Stock

Jean Stapleton — Edith in "All In the Family" — will spend the summer appearing in stock productions of "Time of the Cuckoo" and "The Glass Menagerie" for husband Bill Putsch.

On The Stereo Scene

There Are Almost As Many Chopins As There Are Pianists

By WILBUR LANDREY

Frederic Chopin appeals to the imagination as the long-haired young romantic of the 19th Century who not only wrote all that wonderful music but also was able to be considerably involved with a lady named George Sand before he died, coughing, over the piano keys.

Well, it was something like that, but not entirely. And the music has the rich harmony and melody that sings louder and with more color than even the legend.

Chopin has always been a concert and recording favorite for pianists. Listening to three of the latest recordings makes clear that there are, in fact, almost as many Chopins as pianists.

Gary Graffman's Chopin, for example, is no effeminate youth languishing over the keys in a 19th Century drawing room. In his latest Chopin recording — his first, the jacket says, in more than a decade — Graffman gives us a vigorous, bold and sure Chopin without sacrificing a note (Columbia M 31934). He plays two preludes, including the "Raindrop", the Scherzo 2, Ballade No. 1, the Andante Spianato and Grande Polonaise, and two Nocturnes.

There is also the Chopin of Stephen Bishop, a Chopin lighter in tone and also older in years, for the selections on Bishop's Chopin imported record (Philips 6500 393) are from the composer's later years, from 1841 until his death in 1849 at the age of 39.

Bishop is one of the better young pianists recording, and this recording confirms it. He plays the "Polonaise-Fantaisie" in A Flat, three mazurkas, an impromptu, a barcarolle and two nocturnes.

Finally, on the Seraphim label there is a record entitled "Great Pianists of the Century Play Chopin" — mostly the familiar, favorite Chopin (60207).

There is the wonderful Chopin of Arthur Rubinstein playing two nocturnes in 1936. Alfred Cortot plays the "Raindrop" in 1933, the Funeral March in 1953.

And there are the different Chopins of Witold Malcuzynski, Shura Cherkassky, Claudio Arrau, Vladimir Horowitz, Geza Anda, Dinu Lipatti and Walter Gieseking, all of pianistic fame.

In a record of selections played from 1933 to 1959, the sound is bound to be uneven, but this is one to have for its variety of insights into Chopin.

ALEKSANDER NICOLAEVICH Scriabin (1872-1915) was a strange Russian genius who saw sound in color synesthesia, was engrossed in theosophy and believed his music was part of some greater pattern of things to come.

His piano music has been undergoing a revival in recent years, and the young Soviet pianist, Igor Zhukov, has recorded all 10 of Scriabin's piano concertos. Records two and three have just been released in this country by Melodiya-Angel (SR-40217 and SR-40218). The first release in the series was SR-40191.

There are several other interpretations of all of them available but the new set is welcome.

It makes a lovely wedding gift.

Volkswagen has come up with a way for you to get a Volkswagen — or at least a part of one — as a wedding gift.

Just go to your participating VW dealer and register for a Volkswagen — the same way you'd register at a department store for china or silver.

Then your friends and relatives can buy a fender or steering wheel or windshield wiper or whatever part of the car suits their budget. (And they don't have to bother about gift wrapping what they buy. We'll present it to you right on the car.)

Depending on the size and generosity of your guest list, you could end up with a nice down payment on — or all of — a Volkswagen.

Which is a lot more practical than nine silver trays, six toasters, four blenders and seven whatchamacallits.

See your VW dealer now for all the details.

With a little luck you could drive off on your honeymoon in your very own Volkswagen. And that's a smart way to travel down the road of life.

Johnny Carson's New Life Style: 'More Relaxed'

By VERNON SCOTT

Johnny Carson is enjoying an entirely new life style as he begins his second year of telecasting his "Tonight Show" from California instead of New York.

In place of a fashionable apartment in Manhattan, Johnny lives in a large, rambling Bel Air mansion with swimming pool.

Each morning he enjoys batting some tennis balls against the garage for exercise, a treat that was denied him in New York. He admits he would have bought a place with a tennis court except that it would have attracted friends and relatives from far corners of the world.

"LIFE IS A little more relaxed here," he says. "You have to be careful you don't become apathetic."

There's little chance of Carson turning loafer.

He drives to NBC's Burbank studios five days a week at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. The trip takes him about 20 minutes, or the same time it took to cover one-tenth that distance in Manhattan by cab.

ONCE AT THE studio he studies the rundown of the show, checks on the guests, lines up future guests with his staff, confers with his writers and works on his monologue. He also goes through important mail.

He tapes his show from 6-7:30 p.m. with a live audience, most of whom are people on vacation or Hollywood visitors. Carson says if he taped his audience in the afternoon the people might be less sophisticated.

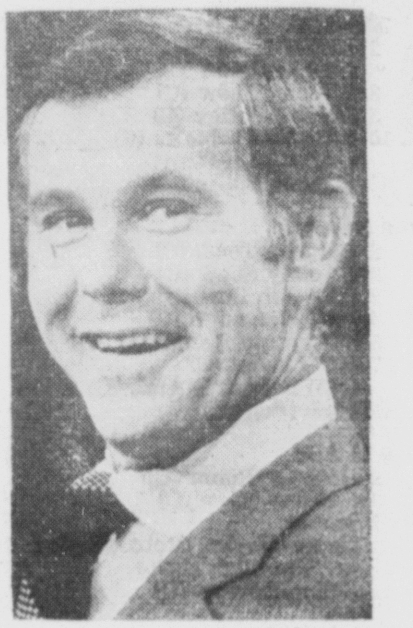
HE INITIATED Johnny Carson Apparel three years ago. His suits and sports jackets and shirts are sold at 1,500 retail stores across the country —and doing well.

Carson is home in plenty of time for dinner which sometimes is cooked by his wife, Joanna. But there is plenty of help in their new home which, curiously, is somewhat more formal than most Southern California homes.

It gives the appearance of a New York apartment, with a few antiques here and there.



JOHNNY CARSON
Still no loafer

"IN CALIFORNIA anything over 10 years old is an antique," Johnny says, grinning.

The house includes a projection room where Johnny frequently entertains six to a dozen friends. After dinner they troop to the projection room for the latest pictures.

It is more than a luxury. Many of Johnny's television guests are movie stars anxious to talk about their pictures.

JOHNNY FEELS he owes it to the stars to have seen their work. Also, he enjoys the privacy afforded by seeing films at home. There are no fans asking for autographs.

On weekends Johnny plays tennis at the homes of friends with courts. And on most Saturdays and Sundays he lolls around the pool.

AMONG JOHNNY'S friends are comedians Dick Martin, Bob Newhart, Don Rickles and his show's producer, Fred DeCordova. He's also close to his brother, Dick, who now directs "The Merv Griffin Show."

Three times a year Johnny stars in Las Vegas for a total of five weeks. He returns to New York six weeks annually to originate his program from his old stamping grounds.
